Since June 1987 the United Kingdom has sought the secretariat of four technical committees and obtained three. My Department has received only a small number of representations from industry representatives about United Kingdom participation in the CEN technical committees.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), Official Report, 31 March 1988, column 590.

British National Space Centre

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who currently is the deputy director of the British National Space Centre; and how many of those who are its officers are drawn from industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no official position of deputy director of the British National Space Centre. Mr. A. C. Nicholas and Mr. K. Inglis acted temporarily as deputy directors following the retirement of Mr. J. C. Leeming on 28 February 1988. I have announced — Official Report, 18 April 1988, columns 350-51 — the appointment of Mr. Arthur Pryor as the new director. None of the BNSC staff is from industry, though an industry representative sits on the BNSC management board.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the British National Space Centre is funded entirely from public funds; and if he will make a statement on its future.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British National Space Centre is funded entirely from public funds. I have nothing further to add to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 18 April 1988.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of those who serve at the British National Space Centre and if he will state the terms of reference defining the role of the centre, and the budget available to it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British National Space Centre was set up to co-ordinate the civil space interests of Government, including those of the Department of Trade and Industry, the Ministry of Defence, the Science and Engineering Research Council and the National Environment Research Council. The BNSC co-ordinates an annual budget of some £120 million and has a staff of around 300.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made concerning the appointment of a director for the National Space Centre.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I announced the appointment of Mr. Arthur Pryor as director general on 18 April.

Airbus

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has yet formed a view on the Coopers and Lybrand report on the Airbus enterprise, a copy of which was sent to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have seen the report, which was commissioned from Coopers and Lybrand by the Boeing company. The Government are at present considering the Airbus system in the light of the recent report of the four independent experts, colloquially known as the "wise men". I have nothing to add on this matter to my reply to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 13 April.

Shoe Imports (Taiwan)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he now plans to take steps to limit shoe imports from Taiwan.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have received detailed information on the effects upon United Kingdom manufacturers of shoe imports from Taiwan, which we are urgently considering.

SIB (Recognition Orders)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether leave has yet been give under section 120(2) of the Financial Services Act for the Securities and Investments Board to make recognition orders in respect of any investment exchanges or clearing houses.

Mr. Maude: Having considered, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, reports made by the Director General of Fair Trading on the rules, regulations, guidance and arrangements submitted by the exchanges and clearing houses listed in the table, my right hon. and noble Friend has concluded that on the basis of the information presently available to him he does not consider there is anything in the material submitted which has, or is intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. He has therefore given his leave to the SIB to make recognition orders in respect of the following investment exchanges and clearing houses:

The London International Financial Futures Exchange Ltd.
LIFFE Options plc.
The London Metal Exchange Limited.
London Commodity Exchange (1986) Limited.
The International Petroleum Exchange of London Limited.
International Commodities Clearing House Limited.
GAFTA Clearing House Company Limited.

Debt Counselling

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he plans to review the level of funding of bodies offering debt counselling particularly in relation to short-term programmes; and if he will make a statement on the level of debt counselling available in Scotland.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

Most debt counselling in Scotland is provided by citizens advice bureaux. The Scottish Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, which provides the central support services for local bureaux, is almost entirely funded by the Government. Its grant-in-aid for the current financial year is £926,000 and this is reviewed each year. The running costs of local bureaux are a matter for local funding, however, I understand that citizens advice bureaux dealt with over 42,000 debt counselling cases in 1986-87 from their 82 offices throughout Scotland.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much his Department intends spending on advertising the enterprise initiative in 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Budget allocations for advertising the enterprise initiative during 1988-89 are still under discussion in my Department. The amount finally set will take into account the need to maintain a good level of response to the initiative.

Space (Technology Demonstration Programme)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with his opposite numbers in the European Space Agency about setting in hand a technology demonstration programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Technology demonstration is a component of many ESA programmes. The agency also has an optional in-orbit technology demonstration activity, already under way. I have not had occasion to discuss this with my ESA opposite numbers, although my officials at the British National Space Centre keep closely in touch with officials at ESA.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the estimated population of 18 years and over resident in each rating authority area in England.

Government Offices (Energy Efficiency)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the target power loading expressed in watts per square metre to which the Property Services Agency works when assessing the energy efficiency of the Government's estate.

Mr. Chope: PSA has no single power loading target for assessing energy efficiency; targets vary widely according to the building type, use and occupancy. Individual Government Departments are now responsible for setting their own energy efficiency targets.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent in 1987 in improving the energy efficiency of lighting in Government offices and premises.

Mr. Chope: On the central Government civil estate covered by the PRS system, approximately £750,000 was made available by PSA in 1987-88 for investment in lighting energy efficiency measures. Savings will also accrue from PSA's maintenance and replacement programme.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much office space per square foot is occupied by Government Departments; how much electricity is consumed by lighting in these offices; and by how much this has been reduced since 1979 as a result of energy conservation measures.

Mr. Chope: The central Government civil estate covered by the PRS system includes approximately 6·6 million sq m of office accommodation, including computer centres. The electricity consumption of these offices costs approximately £16 million per year. It is not feasible to keep separate records for the whole estate on the energy consumption of lighting installations.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what target reductions in electricity usage for lighting the Property Services Agency expects to achieve in 1988; and what was the target for 1987.

Mr. Chope: PSA does not set specific targets for savings in electrical consumption for lighting. Targets are set for total energy savings, which are now the responsibility of individual Departments.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will be responsible for the payment of the poll tax on prison department properties lived in by prison officers and their families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Prison officers and members of their families over the age of 18 will be responsible for paying the personal community charge on the same basis as other adults.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance is to be given to local authorities in England and Wales to compensate for the information technology expenditure which will be incurred by the registration process for the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 13 April at column 127 to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Janman) and my reply of 20 April at column 481 to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the additional administration costs falling on the London borough of Waltham Forest as a result of his decision to make transitional arrangements for introduction of the community charge in that borough; and if he will reimburse those additional administration costs.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1987; c. 642]: We have now further considered the question of reimbursing those boroughs which will be required to maintain their domestic rating system alongside the community charge during the transitional period. We have concluded that it would be right to arrange for some compensation for the reasonable extra costs involved outside the revenue support grant arrangements. We shall therefore be seeking a power to pay specific grant to the boroughs concerned. The details of the proposed grant will be a matter for consultation.

We have also reconsidered the extent of the application of these arrangements in the light of representations from some of those affected and in the light of the preliminary returns of expenditure for 1988-89. We have concluded that it would be right to increase the threshold for inclusion within these arrangements so that only those areas where combined budgeted expenditure for 1987-88 of the authorities operating in that area exceeded the combined needs assessment for the area by more than £200 per head will now be affected. This change would have the effect of ensuring that domestic rates would be abolished in the London borough of Waltham Forest, the Royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea, the City of Westminster and the London borough of Wandsworth from 1 April 1990.

Shopping and Leisure Complexes

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on out-of-town shopping and leisure complexes in the light of the recent consultation paper issued by SERPLAN on out-of-town shopping and leisure complexes, a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Mr. Waldegrave: The London and South East Regional Planning Conference published a paper "Towards a Policy for Regional Shopping Centres" in July 1987. SERPLAN drew on responses to that paper in commenting last autumn on a consultation paper by my Department which became planning policy guidance note 6, published on 20 January. This note sets out the Government's policy on major retail development; a copy is in the Library.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for initiatives to provide new rented housing for local people in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The White Paper published last September, "Housing: The Government's Proposals", Cm. 214, set out the Government's proposals for housing generally including proposals to expand the housing association programme which provides low cost homes for rent and other tenures in rural and urban areas. On 11 February my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Housing and Planning announced that the Housing Corporation's guidelines for allocations to rural areas were being reviewed. Priority will no longer be confined to designated rural stress areas and the corporation will aim to double the present level of provision by housing associations in rural areas.

We are considering whether any further measures, designed specifically to help rural areas, are needed.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications of the price differential that now exists between leaded and unleaded petrol for the date on which he envisages that the European directive on vehicle emissions for medium and large car categories will be implemented.

Mr. Moynihan: The increased duty differential between unleaded and leaded petrol announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement has no implications for the Government's plans to implement the new EC directive 87/76/EEC, which remain as I stated in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 7 December, at columns 20-21.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on an agreement to control the exhaust emissions from small cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I reported the current state of discussions on stage II emission limits for small cars under the new EC directive 87/76/EEC in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 24 March, at columns 186-87. It is for the German presidency to consider how further progress towards an agreement might be made.

Unused Sites (Richmond)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the unused sites owned by public bodies within the London borough of Richmond upon Thames together with their owners and sizes in acres.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested for unused and underutilised sites entered on the land register for the London borough of Richmond upon Thames is as follows:

Owner and site address	Size in acres
London borough of Richmond upon Thames
Land at Meadway, Twickenham	3·50
Land at Oak avenue, Hampton	3·25
Lichfield gardens car park, Richmond	1·40

Home Defence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what way his Department will participate in any or all of the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drake's Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown and Strong Link due to take place in September and October 1988; how many staff are allocated to this task; how much such participation is estimated to cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: DOE involvement in the forthcoming military home defence exercises is expected to be minimal and limited to normal day-to-day support services provided, on request, by the Property Services Agency.

Housing Associations

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing associations in receipt of higher management allowance for their work in the inner city areas; and if he will give the amount of the allowance in each case.

Mrs. Roe: Higher management allowances are awarded to housing associations to reflect the additional costs arising from tenant needs and estate difficulties which present particular problems, including work in areas of urban and rural stress. The list below details those associations in receipt of HMA as at 1 April 1988 who cited the fact that they worked in such stress areas as at least part of the reason for their extra management costs. The HMA awards made to these associations are also listed.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish in local newspapers the list of petrol stations at which unleaded petrol may be purchased.

Mr. Moynihan: I will be delighted to make the latest list, and a new map produced by the Department, available to any newspaper or organisation which will publish it.

Radon

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will urgently bring forward legislation requiring new and existing houses to be protected from the ingress of radon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The building regulations already provide sufficient powers to regulate the construction of new buildings. For existing buildings we are considering what action needs to be taken, but it is unlikely that new legislation will be needed.

Departmental Cars

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Mini and Renault 4 cars held by his Department in store have been sold in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: There are no Minis or Renault 4s held in store. Since 1982, the earliest year for which records are available, the Crown Suppliers have disposed of 45 Austin Rover Minis by auction.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what purpose his Department maintains Mini and Renault 4 cars in store; and how many are kept.

Mr. Chope: The Crown Suppliers — an operating trading fund of the Department of the Environment — have no Minis in store. They have six Austin Rover Minis on hire to, and operated by, Government Departments, and hold two as operational reserves. No Renault 4s are held.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost to his Department of maintaining Mini and Renault 4 cars, including respectively the cost of (a) rental and (b) updating Ministry of Transport tests.

Mr. Chope: The estimated annual cost of repair and maintenance for the Austin Rover Minis currently operated by the Crown Suppliers is £2,800 pa—£350 per vehicle. There are no Renault 4s operated by the Department. There are no rental costs and costs of Ministry of Transport tests are £87·50.

Charitable Land (Change of Use)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued regarding the status of land originally donated for charitable purposes when applications are made for change of use.

Mr. Waldegrave: No guidance is necessary. The planning system determines whether proposed changes in the use of land are acceptable in the public interest. Planning permission granted under the Town and Country Planning Act does not override restrictions on the use of land imposed under other legislation or by other means.

Water Companies

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water companies are currently partially or wholly owned by foreign interests in the United Kingdom; and what percentage of ownership this represents.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not available.

Melton Borough Council

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to the reply by the joint Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 20 April, Official Report, column 824, he will now give details of the information he has received from his regional office in Nottingham regarding the level of rate set for two successive financial years by the Melton borough council.

Mr. Chope: Information on local rates is collected centrally, not by regional offices. Listed below are the rates levied in Melton in the last two years, from which it will be seen that the district rate for Melton borough council has been zero in both years. The local rate has been made up entirely of special expenses in Melton Mowbray and parish precepts.

District rate	0·00	0·00
Special district expenses	2·61	4·06
Average parish precept	1·52	1·76
Local rate	4·13	[1]5·82
Leicestershire C.C. precept	199·30	[2]221·20
General rate	203·43	[3]227·02
Domestic rate	184·93	[4]208·52

[1] 40·9 per cent. increase.
[2] 11·0 per cent. increase.
[3] 11·6 per cent. business increase.
[4] 12·8 per cent. domestic increase.

Dotterels

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the increase in the ringing of dotterels.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The increase in ringing results from a study commenced in May 1987 by the Nature Conservancy Council to assess the impact of tourism, grazing and other factors on the dotterel's mountain habitats, with the aim of determining the vulnerability of the breeding population to these pressures and the species lifespan and breeding behaviour.

Ringing is carried out by harmless and well-tested techniques, under licences granted by the NCC under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy with regard to the ringing of dotterels and their chicks by professional ringers.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The dotterel appears on annex 1 of the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds as a species requiring special conservation measures concerning its habitat. The colour-ringing of a small proportion of birds is a vital part of a study by the Nature Conservancy Council, commencing in May last year, to provide a sound scientific basis for the implementation of our obligations under the directive.

Housing (East London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 20 April, Official Report, column 825, he will state the name of the consultants studying the scope for housing development in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consultant has not yet been appointed. Invitations to tender for the contract will be sent out shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 20 April, Official Report, column 825, he will more closely identify the sites in Newham under consideration for housing development, giving (a) the acreage, (b) the current ownership pattern and (c) the time scale envisaged from consultancy to commencement for the building projects and (d) the likely financial package involved.

Mr. Waldegrave: Further information on the general areas to be covered by the studies will be published shortly. The consultant who is appointed to undertake the study will be asked to report on the sites within each area, including those matters raised by the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Policing)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to what discussions have recently taken place between the Metropolitan police, London Regional Transport and the British Transport police concerning policing of the London Underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Metropolitan police and the British Transport police liaise closely at all levels on the policing of the London Underground. London Regional Transport is represented on the British Transport police committee and staff of London Underground Limited are in constant contact with British Transport police officers on operational matters.

Vehicle Testing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to undertake a major review of the MoT test certificate procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A review of the MoT testing scheme was completed last year.

Recommendations relating to technical standards and disciplinary action are being discussed with the motor trade. These will lead to significant improvements to the standard of testing.

Other measures already introduced include improvements to the security printing of MoT certificates and tighter security at MoT garages. The Department has improved its information about trading standards offences so that MoT examiners who are convicted of such offences can be dealt with under the Department's disciplinary arrangements.

In total MoT authorisation was withdrawn from 127 garages last year compared with 73 in the previous year. We are continuing to discuss with the trading standards organisations further measures to combat fraudulent use of test certificates.

Motor Trade (Abuses)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received with regard to the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards report "Tackling Abuses in the Motor Trade" of October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from hon. Members. The then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs and I discussed many of the issues covered in this report with the Director General of Fair Trading, motor trade representatives and others on 15 December 1987. We agreed the desirability of amending section 60 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 to make it easier for trading standards officers to deal with sellers of unroadworthy vehicles. The LACOTS is considering our suggestions about the possible extension of trading standards officers' powers to inspect cars on garage forecourts. DVLC officials are contributing to Office of Fair Trading investigations into action against "clocking" of used cars.

Dual Carriageways (Central Reservations)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last 10 years gaps in the central reservation of dual carriageway trunk roads have been closed in spite of objections being raised to the advertised proposals; and in how many of these instances a public inquiry was held before any ministerial decision was made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret that this information is not available. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Near Misses

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further action he is taking to reduce the risk of near misses of airliners in British airspace and at British airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Action to reduce the risk of air misses in United Kingdom airspace is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority. The authority is wholly responsible for aviation regulation and (with the Ministry of Defence) for air traffic management in the United Kingdom. I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), on 18 April 1988, at columns 532-34.

Ambulances

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to bring private ambulances within the purview of the traffic commissioners by abolishing the right of such ambulances to operate on a restricted public service vehicle licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no need for such legislation. Restricted PSV licences are issued by the traffic commissioners. The holders are subject to obligations (for example, in respect of maintenance) comparable to those required under a standard licence.

Home Defence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what way his Department will participate in any or all of the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drake's Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown and Strong Link due to take place in September and October 1988; how many staff are allocated to this task; how much such participation is estimated to cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One person in the Department has been invited to take part in Exercise Strong Link. The estimated cost is £173. Arrangements have also been made for some exercise activities to take place, at no cost to the Department, at sites occupied by public sector transport undertakings.

King's Cross and St. Pancras

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals British Rail have submitted to him in respect of King's Cross and St. Pancras stations.

Mr. David Mitchell: None.

Dial-a-ride

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect deregulation of transport in London will have on the future of dial-a-ride schemes.

Mr. David Mitchell: None.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for the expansion of dial-a-ride; and what changes in funding are likely during the next 12 months.

Mr. David Mitchell: We look to London Regional Transport for advice on the future development of the dial-a-ride scheme in London, which has considerably expanded in recent years. Funding this year is 50 per cent. higher than three years ago. We are encouraged by LRT's continuing efforts to secure greater cost-effectiveness and enhanced levels of service.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to announce his policy towards the funding of the dial-a-ride schemes beyond April 1989.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport's bids for funding the London dial-a-rides beyond April 1989 will be considered in the normal way in the investment and financing review.

Ammunition Lorries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce regulations to ensure that ammunition lorries are escorted by trained Ministry of Defence Police or military personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new regulations will provide for drivers of lorries carrying high explosive ammunition to be accompanied by a competent person. The arrangements for movement of military ammunition will be a matter for decision by the responsible authorities.

Rolling Stock and Locomotives

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information and details of specifications for new investment on (a) rolling stock and (b) locomotives are required by and sent to his Department for consideration before approval is given for capital expenditure to be incurred.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR's investment submissions to Ministers are supported by copies of the appraisals BR uses for its own internal consideration of proposals. These normally include an analysis of the problem identified and the objective of the investment; a business background; a description of options; major assumptions and inputs; a financial evaluation (including sensitivity tests); and non-financial considerations.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about lorries and parts of lorries recovered from the Herald of Free Enterprise in connection with their roadworthiness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 April 1988]: None of which I am aware.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that vehicles recovered from the Herald of Free Enterprise conform with vehicle inspectorate construction and the regulations before being allowed on the road again.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The law requires this already.

Public Carriage Office

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why delays in inspections for roadworthiness at the Public Carriage Office are increasing; and what steps he is taking to eliminate the problems to drivers and owners of black cabs and to the residents of Penton street being caused by these delays.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The operation of the Public Carriage Office is the responsibility of an assistant commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. I understand that the March peak in the number of vehicles submitted for relicensing and the early Easter holiday have caused a temporary build-up. The PCO has taken short-term steps to deal with the backlog, and longer-term measures are in hand to improve the quality of the vehicles being submitted and the ways in which they are tested, particularly by the introduction of a booking system.

DEFENCE

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning low flying over Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 February 1988 and 19 April 1988 the Ministry of Defence received 83 inquiries or complaints from Wales about low-flying military aircraft.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of defence procurement contracts placed by his Department during the last full financial year.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the financial year 1986-87, the latest period for which full information is available, the total value of headquarter contracts placed by my Department was £9·3 billion.

Personnel (Location)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of armed services personnel are stationed in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) each of the English regions and (d) elsewhere.

Mr. Freeman: At 30 June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the percentages of the total strength of the armed services stationed in each of the areas listed were as follows:

	Percentage
Wales	1·9
Scotland	6·2
England—Total	59·9
North	0·7
Yorkshire and Humberside	4·5
East Midlands	4·1
East Anglia	5·0
South East	27·2
South West	15·2
West Midlands	2·7
North West	0·5
Elsewhere	32·0

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has no child care provision at present for civilian employees. The Department is however encouraging personnel to become involved in the setting up of holiday play schemes.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has considered any proposals for joint production, design or custody of nuclear weapons with any country other than the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom is currently studying the requirement for a successor to its free-fall nuclear bomb. In this context, we have considered with France each country's requirement for an air-launched stand-off missile. Exchanges are continuing with a view to indentifying where British and French requirements might be similar, and assessing what merit there might be in collaboration.

Military Training Areas

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are made for the use of military training areas by (a) foreign military units based in the United Kingdom and (b) foreign troops and aircraft temporarily stationed in the United Kingdom; whether any payments are made for the use of these facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Bilateral agreements exist with a number of NATO and other foreign forces covering their use of military training areas in the United Kingdom. Detailed arrangements in each case differ, but such agreements may include the waiver of charges where reciprocal use is made by British forces of training areas in the visiting force's country.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts have been awarded to companies operating in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sixty-three.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts for research and/or development have been awarded to universities and other research institutions in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Twenty-three.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many jobs have been created in (a) research institutions and (b) universities in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme;

(2) what information he has as to how many jobs have been created in companies operating in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Such information is not maintained by the Government.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of contracts awarded to companies operating in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately $54 million.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of contracts awarded to universities and other research institutions in the United Kingdom, as part of the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately $7 million.

Computer-aided Accidents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to use Viper computer chips in safety critical systems controlled by his Department; what other steps are being taken to avoid computer-aided accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I anticipate that Viper will be used in critical defence equipment delivered from the early 1990s onwards, as part of the Department's continuing work on high integrity computing.

Horseguards Parade (Flags)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the cleanliness of the flags at the entrance to Horseguards parade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Only one representation has been received from a member of the public concerning the cleanliness of the flags at the entrance to Horse Guards parade. Every effort is made to maintain the flags in a reasonable state, both those that are flown continually and those flown only on certain occasions. The flags are cleaned regularly, repaired as necessary and replaced once past economic repair. On certain ceremonial occasions, such as Her Majesty The Queen's birthday parade, a new Union flag is used.

Home Defence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in relation to the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drake's Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown and Strong Link scheduled to take place in September and October 1988, he will place copies of the exercise scenarios in the Library; if he will list those (a) local authorities, (b) health authorities, (c) police authorities, (d) water authorities and (e) others which have indicated their intention to (i) participate in, (ii) give assistance to, or (iii) observe each of these exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is the hope of district commanders that a number of non-military agencies will participate in, assist or observe the military home defence exercises which are taking place this autumn, although the details have not yet been finalised. It is likely that local authorities' participation will be limited to attendance at visitor days. The police are expected to take part in the exercises but the level of participation will vary at the discretion of individual chief constables. There will be some limited NHS involvement, with ambulance services and voluntary aid societies taking part in a number of the exercises. Water authority assistance is limited to the provision of a number of sites which will be used, at no cost to the authorities, to practise key point guarding. Planning is continuing for the participation of appropriate fire services, Customs and Excise officials, port and transport police. It is not our practice to release details of exercise scenarios.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military home defence exercises are due to take place in (a) the Scottish Highlands and (b) the Scottish Lowlands military districts during autumn 1988 in relation to those exercises due to take place in England and Wales; if he will place the exercise scenarios in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Bonnie Dundee is the only military home defence exercise taking place in Scotland this autumn. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 4 February. It is not our practice to give details of exercise scenarios.

F16 Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards flights by United States Air Force F-16 aircraft over United Kingdom airspace following recent crashes in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: NATO military aircraft flying in United Kingdom airspace, including United States Air Force F-16s, are subject to the same regulations as aircraft operated by our own forces. Should concern arise about the safety or airworthiness of any military aircraft type operating in United Kingdom airspace appropriate steps would be taken.

NATO Nuclear Planning Group

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the light of the Danish general election called for 10 May, the meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear planning group in Kolding, Denmark, will now take place as scheduled on 27 and 28 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the light of the election called by the Danish Government for 10 May, it has been agreed that the nuclear planning group meeting due to be held at Kolding in Denmark on 27-28 April will now take place at NATO headquarters in Brussels on the same dates.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the Statement on the Defence Estimates for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend expects to announce the date of publication next month.

Ammunition Transport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to the United States Army on its action in February in substituting civilian personnel for Ministry of Defence Police for the task of escorting ammunition lorries at Caerwent.

Mr. Freeman: No. I am satisfied with the current arrangements for the transport of ammunition to and from RAF Caerwent using civilian attendants, which meet the provisions of the Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how much the cost of employing escorts for ammunition lorries from Caerwent base has been reduced as a result of the replacing of Ministry of Defence police by civilian personnel.

Mr. Freeman: The varying nature of the ammunition transport task at RAF Caerwent means that it is not possible to quantify the overall saving resulting from this change. However, the cost of employing a civilian attendant for this task is about half that of using a Ministry of Defence policeman.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is required for escorts employed for the transport of ammunition by road.

Mr. Freeman: Drivers and escorts of vehicles used in the transport of ammunition by road are given training and instructions to enable them to understand the nature of the dangers to which the ammunition carried may give rise and the action they are required to take in an emergency. Such training and instruction is in accordance with the Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether civilian personnel have been substituted for Ministry of Defence police or military personnel in the work of escorting ammunition convoys from any bases under his control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Drivers and escorts of vehicles used for transporting ammunition, whether in convoy or not, may be military or civilian personnel according to circumstances. Ministry of Defence police do not normally escort ammunition convoys.

Tain Bombing Range

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 April to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, Official Report, column 504, which services he proposes to seek tenders for at Tain bombing range; what time scale is envisaged for the return and assessment of tenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Tenders will be sought for a range of support services, including quadrant observation, range warden activities, range safety petrol, target maintenance, the maintenance of communications equipment and vehicles, vehicle driving and administration. The supervision of the range will remain as it is at present, under RAF control. Invitations to tender will be issued in May. Any contract would not commence before April 1989.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many centres for chemical weapons production are currently in existence in the United Kingdom; and what is the total estimate of stockpiled chemical weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None.

Mooring Vessels

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when will he be in a position to announce the orders for the range mooring vessel and the two power mooring lighters.

Mr. Sainsbury: Orders will be placed later today with Richards Shipbuilders Ltd. for a range mooring vessel and with McTay Marine for two powered mooring lighters. Upon completion, these vessels will enter service with the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service. I am pleased that it has been possible to conclude the contracts for the three vessels at prices significantly lower than the total of about £10 million originally budgeted for them in 1985-86.

NORTHERN IRELAND

West Belfast (Citizen's Arrest)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there is any evidence to suggest that an attempt was made to carry out a citizens arrest by those persons who attacked and murdered two soldiers in west Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, several people have already been charged with offences in connection with these murders, and police investigations continue. In these circumstances I cannot properly attempt to anticipate what evidence may emerge.

Terrorism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has to date on whether there has been a positive response to the continuing advertising campaign in Northern Ireland seeking information about terrorist activity and encouraging use of the confidential telephone service.

Mr. Stanley: Since the present campaign began in January to publicise the confidential telephone service there has been a very positive and encouraging response from members of the public.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Stanley: In accordance with the commitment in the circular "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Northern Ireland Civil Service" published May 1986, the Northern Ireland Civil Service has considered the provision of child care facilities and in particular workplace nurseries. It concluded that such nurseries could only be provided with a substantial injection of capital to meet start-up costs and a continuing subsidy from Government towards running costs. The use of public funds for this purpose has not so far been considered justifiable in relation to other needs.

However the Northern Ireland Civil Service is anxious to assist staff in making other suitable child minding arrangements and recently introduced a scheme to assist staff to find suitable registered childminders. In addition it is considering with the trade unions the provision of other facilities such as day care for pre-school age children, after-school care for older children, and holiday play schemes.

The home Civil Service part of the Northern Ireland Office, which comprises about 190 staff divided between London and Belfast, does not provide child care facilities, but gives sympathetic consideration to the individual needs of staff with young children.

Education (Maintenance Allowances)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what groups have made representations about the review of educational maintenance allowances in Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will implement the proposals contained in the NUS/USI document on a proposed new educational maintenance allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what arrangements he proposes to make regarding the issuing of a report after the review procedure of educational maintenance allowances has been completed;

(4) how long it will take to complete the review of educational maintenance allowances presently being undertaken by the Department of Education.

Dr. Mawhinney: Representations have been received from the citizens advice bureaux, the NUS-USI, Omagh district council and the Western education and library board. I shall take into account the views of these bodies before reaching final conclusions. I shall also consider whether to issue a report and I will be making a statement later this year.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of payments made to those in receipt of educational maintenance allowance in each of the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 in each of the four education and library boards in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Education and Library Boards	Number of payments per annum[1]
	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	[2]1987-88
Belfast	488	442	458	460	558
North-Eastern	864	982	412	436	320
South-Eastern	476	380	310	280	260
Southern	1,848	1,434	964	778	740
Western	2,072	1,500	1,260	1,136	1,120

[1] EMAs are paid in two instalments per annum and the number in receipt of educational maintenance allowances is half the number shown in the table.
[2] Estimated.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of total public recurrent expenditure on higher and further education has been attributable to educational maintenance allowances in each year from 1983 to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: Public expenditure on education maintenance allowances is incurred under the public expenditure programme for administration and miscellaneous services.

The expenditure figures are as follows:

1983-84	523,838
1984-85	518,313
1985-86	363,990
1986-87	316,401
[1]1987-88	264,000

[1] Provisional.

This expenditure, as a proportion of recurrent expenditure on higher and further education (including teacher training) is as follows:

	Percentage
1983-84	0·4
1984-85	0·3
1985-86	0·2
1986-87	0·2
[1]1987-88	0·1

Chief Constable (Report)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Chief Constable of Northern Ireland's report for 1987.

Mr. Stanley: A copy was placed in the Library on 12 April.

Maryfield Secretariat

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the total sums expended on the Maryfield secretariat by (a) the United Kingdom, indicating on which vote it is borne, and (b) the Irish Republic; and if he will give a breakdown for each country for (i) salaries and wages of civil servants, (ii) security expenditure for capital and wages, (iii) telephones, (iv) heat and light, (v) stationery and other office costs, (vi) travel and (vii) other costs, for each year or financial year of the secretariat's existence.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Total costs to United Kingdom public funds of the secretariat to the end of March 1988 since its commencement in 1985 are provisionally assessed at £468,000. I have nothing further to add to replies on this subject that I have given in the past to the hon. Gentleman and others.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing at the latest available date a breakdown of the (a) United Kingdom civil servants, (b) Northern Ireland civil servants and (c) civil servants of the Irish Republic, by grade, religion and sex, working in the Maryfield secretariat.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 12 April 1988]: No.

Hayshed Bugging

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to his answers of 25 March, Official Report, column 241, 28 March, Official Report, column 314, and 31 March, Official Report, column 700, he will outline the policy considerations which underlie his statements that it is not the practice to comment on matters such as the legal authority under which a bug was placed in the hayshed in which Michael Tighe was killed.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 21 April 1988]: It is established policy that the Government do not comment on matters which might jeopardise national security.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police officers (Assaults)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department maintains any central record of assaults on police officers in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", (supplementary tables volumes 1 and 11) copies of which are in the Library, of assaults on police officers which result in proceedings for that specific offence.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether police forces in England and Wales are required to maintain records of assaults on police officers; and in what format.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no requirement for police forces to maintain records of assaults on police officers. The majority of forces do keep such records though in differing formats, and HMCI constabulary is now considering with ACPO the possibility of standardising recording practice.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers were assaulted in the execution of their duty in each of the last five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the number of Metropolitan police officers recorded by the force as having been assaulted in the execution of their duty in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1986	3,400
1985	3,009
1984	2,765
1983	3,150

Asylum

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were received in each of the last five years; of which countries the applicants were citizens; and which applications were successful.

Mr. Renton: Information on applications for refugee status and their outcome, by nationality, for 1979 to 1984 was published in tables 5A-5F of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics United Kingdom, 1985" (issue 12/86). The corresponding figures for 1985 (which have been revised since the issue of that bulletin) and 1986 were published in tables 6 and 7 of the corresponding bulletin for 1986 (issue 13/87). Copies of these publications are in the Library. The figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Police Pay

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in police pay for each year since 1974.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The increases in the pay of police officers below the rank of superintendent have been as follows:

	per cent.
1 September 1974	16·7
1 September 1975	30
1 September 1976	[1]5
1 September 1977	10
1 September 1978 / 1 May 1979	[2]39
1 September 1979	13·5
1 September 1980	21·3
1 September 1981	13·2
1 September 1982	10·3
1 September 1983	8·4
1 September 1984	5·13
1 September 1985	7·5
1 September 1986	7·5
1 September 1987	7·75

Notes:
[1] Subject to a minimum increase of £2·50 a week and a maximum increase of £4 a week.
[2] Implemented in two phases, with half being paid on 1 September 1978 and the remainder on 1 May 1979.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present annual salary of a police constable in his or her first year of work (a) in London and (b) outside London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The basic annual salary for police constables in all forces during their first year of service is £8,352 for those who were under the age of 22 on joining the service and £10,512 for those who were aged 22 or over. All officers receive free accommodation or rent allowance in lieu, which varies from force to force. Police constables in London get an additional £945 in London weighting and £1,011 in London allowance.

Document Loss (Prosecution Policy)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 14 March, Official Report, columns 423-24, if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to when a decision was taken not to refer the matter of the loss of documents to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Hurd: No; in the circumstances set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 14 March the question of referring the matter to the Director of Public Prosections did not arise.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish tables in the Official Report to show for the area covered by the Cheshire constabulary for each calendar year since 1 January 1979 the number of and types of firearms certificates issued by the Cheshire constabulary itemising (a) rifles up to ·230in or 6mm, (b) rifles over ·230in or 6mm, (c) rifles over ·22in which are of self-loading rifle type, (d) rifles over ·22in of non self-loading rifle type, (e) pistols and revolvers up to ·230in or 6mm, (f) pistols and revolvers over ·230in or 6mm, (g) pistols and revolvers over ·22 in non-semi-automatic, (h) pistols and revolvers over ·22in semi-automatic, (i) humane killers, (j) signal pistols and mini-flare projectors, (k) smooth bore guns of under 24in barrel length, (l) rifle/shotgun combinations and (m) dangerous air weapons and CO2 guns.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics on the issue of firearm certificates are published by the chief constable of Cheshire in his annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library. More detailed information is not held centrally.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in relation to the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 in Gwent as it affects the issue of firearms certificates, how many (a) applications were received for grant, (b) applications were subsequently withdrawn by the applicant, (c) applications were received for renewal, (d) applications were subsequently withdrawn by the applicant, (e) certificates were in force on 1 January, and (f) certificates were granted for each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(2) in relation to the administration of the Firearms Act in Gwent as it affects the issue of shotgun certificates, how many (a) applications were received for grant, (b) applications were subsequently withdrawn by the applicant, (c) applications were received for renewal, (d) applications were subsequently withdrawn by the applicant, (e) certificates were in force on 1 January, and (f) certificates were granted for each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(3) how many shotgun certificates were cancelled in Gwent in each calender year since 1979 inclusive on each of the following grounds (a) did not wish to renew, (b) no longer required, (c) transferred to other forces, (d) renewal applications refused, (e) deceased, (f) failed to apply for renewal, for example, moved, unable to trace, and (g) revoked;

(4) how many applications for grant of shotgun certificates under the Firearms Act 1968 were refused in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(5) how many temporary shotgun certificates were issued in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979; inclusive;

(6) how many shotgun certificates were transferred to Gwent from other forces in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(7) how many firearms certificates were cancelled in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979 inclusive on each of the following grounds (a) did not wish to renew, (b) no longer required, (c) transferred to other forces, (d) renewal applications refused, (e) deceased, (f) failed to apply for renewal, for example, moved, unable to trace, and (g) revoked;

(8) how many applications for grant of firearms certificates under the Firearms Act 1968 were refused in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(9) how many temporary firearms certificates were issued in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(10) how many firearms certificates were transferred to Gwent from the forces in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(11) how many applications for shotgun certificates resulted in appeals against a decision of the chief constable in Gwent because of (a) a refusal to grant, (b) refusal to renew and, (c) revocation in each year since 1979, giving in each case the name of the appellant and the date of the appeal;

(12) how many appeals against a decision of the chief constable in Gwent relating to applications for shotgun certificates were withdrawn by (a) the police and (b) the appellant prior to hearing in each calendar year time 1979, inclusive, and in how many cases the certificate was granted;

(13) how many orders of mandamus or judicial review were (a) threatened and (b) served in relation to appeals against decisions of the chief constable in Gwent relating to applications for shotgun certificates in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(14) how many appeals against a decision of the chief constable in Gwent relating to applications for firearms certificates were withdrawn prior to hearing by (a) the police and (b) the appellant in each calendar year time 1979, inclusive, and in how many cases the certificate was granted;

(15) how many orders of mandamus or judicial review were (a) threatened and (b) served in relation to appeals against decisions of the chief constable in Gwent relating to applications for firearms certificates in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(16) how many applications for firearms certificates resulted in appeals against a decision of the chief constable in Gwent because of (a) refusal to grant, (b) refusal to renew, (c) refusal of variation to firearms, (d) refusal of variation to ammunition, (e) refusal of variation to conditions of use and (f) revocation in each calendar year since 1979, inclusive;

(17) how many (a) revolvers and pistols, (b) rifles, (c) shotguns, (d) air weapons, (e) humane killers and (f) flare guns, were (i) voluntarily surrendered and (ii) confiscated, in Gwent in each calendar year since 1979 inclusive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics on the issue of firearm and shotgun certificates are published by the chief constable of Gwent in his annual report, copies of which are available in the Library. More detailed information is not held centrally.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the principal recommendations of the McKay report on firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question of 7 March 1988 at column 5.

Police Officers

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of police officers in service in England and Wales at the beginning of each decade; and what proportion of police officers to population this represented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information conveniently available, save that for 1987, is taken from reports of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and is as follows:

Position at	Authorised Establishment	Population	Police/ Population Ratio
29 September 1929	[1]57,677	37,884,950	1:657
29 September 1939	[1]63,228	39,950,637	1:632

Computer Hacking

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to amend the Forgery Act, or to introduce legislation in the light of the decision of the House of Lords on 21 April that computer hacking is not a criminal breach of the Forgery Act.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend is awaiting the Law Commission's report on computer-related crime before reaching any conclusion on whether further legislation is necessary.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report of the ministerial group on alcohol misuse on young people and alcohol.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 19 January at columns 646-47. Action has since been taken to amend the Licensing Bill to tighten the offence of selling alcohol to under-age drinkers, to increase penalties for those found guilty of doing so and to make it an offence for wholesalers to sell alcohol to people under 18. Consultations are in progress on implementing in the United Kingdom the European Community directive requiring strength labelling of alcoholic drinks. The IBA and the Advertising Standards Authority are reviewing in conjunction with the industry their codes of practice on advertising alcohol. The BBC and IBA are reviewing the portrayal of alcohol in general TV programming. Consideration is being given to various longer-term measures.

Cyrille Regis

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be answering the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, sent to his private office of 14 December 1987, regarding the application of registration as a British citizen by Mr. Cyrille Regis; if he expects the application to be completed by 4 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We do not appear to have received the hon. Member's letter. Mr. Regis's application has been granted, and his certificate of registration will be sent to him this week.

Refugees (Hong Kong)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allocate an increasing priority for resettlement to refugees from closed camps in Hong Kong in proportion to the increasing length of their internment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Policy on the admission of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong remains as set out in the reply my right hon. Friend gave to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) and the then hon. Member for Battersea, Mr. Alf Dubs, on 8 May 1987 at column 549.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The following contracts were awarded to management or computer consultancy firms by the Home Office in 1987:

Firm and subject of assignment

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount spent by his Department in 1987 on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 29 March 1988]: The Home Office spent approximately £3,316,000 on management and computer consultancies in 1987.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the accumulated deficit on the Severn bridge by 31 March.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated accumulated deficiency at 31 March 1988 was about £75 million.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the level of the administrative charge made for issuing retirement pensioners concessionary travel passes in London; what is the reason for the charge; how it is calculated; by how much it has changed since the last review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The present concessionary travel arrangements for pensioners on LRT services in London are provided by agreement between LRT and the London local authorities. Permits continue to be issued free of charge to pensioners. I understand that certain of the administrative costs incurred by LRT and the Post Office are reimbursed by the participating local authorities who also fund the cost of the concession.

Airedale Route

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects construction work to be completed on stages 1 and 2 of the A629-A650 Airedale route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The terms of the contracts provide for works to be completed on stage 1 in September this year and stage 2 in January 1989. Good progress is being made. I hope that the roads will be open to traffic in advance of these dates. It is too early yet to give firm opening dates.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the current standard of the entry examination for the register of approved driving instructors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are discussing with the national associations that represent driving instructors, ways of making the training and testing of driver instructors as effective as possible. We have reviewed the standard and raised the pass mark required for the initial written knowledge test. Those who propose to teach road skills and behaviour must themselves be thorough masters of the subject matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Televising of Proceedings

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek assurances from ITN in view of the policy document "ITN Into the Nineties", that current practices regarding use of the outside broadcast unit in televising of proceedings will be maintained, with particular regard to the implications of new policy affecting transmission from the House of Commons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I will draw the hon. Member's concern to the attention of the Select Committee which is now considering the arrangements for the experiment in the televising of our proceedings. The manner in which this experiment is conducted will be a matter for decision by the House.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors (Tests)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information has been provided to the European Commission by (a) his Department and (b) the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in regard to the Environment Commissioner's stated concern to the European Parliament on 10 February that the Commission lacked details of past and planned test experiments at United Kingdom nuclear reactors under European Treaty article 34.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 10 February my officials and the chief inspector of the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate have had discussions with members of the staff of the European Commission.

The Commission concluded that the United Kingdom has not carried out or planned experiments falling within the scope of article 34 of the Euratom treaty.

Coal Industry

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from British Coal with regard to amendments to legislation currently on the statute book, affecting the mining industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The British Coal Corporation maintains regular contact with the Department on a wide range of issues covered by legislation.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirrionnydd Nant Conwy, 29 February, Official Report, column 482, what quantities of unsafeguarded uranium are present at each United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority site; why unsafeguarded uranium is present at non-mixed facility civil nuclear sites; and whether the Euratom and International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards authorities hae been informed of the arrangements in detail.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA carries out contract R and D work for customers; that for MOD involves the presence of small quantities of unsafeguarded materials at UKAEA sites, details of which cannot be disclosed for reasons of national security. The relevant safeguards authorities are kept informed of movements into and out of safeguards.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirronnydd Nant Conwy, 29 February, Official Report, column 482, on nuclear materials, he will set out the procedures under which civil safeguarded uranium is co-processed with unsafeguarded defence uranium in compliance with the specific safeguards arrangements for civil uranium at Springfields.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A reporting regime has been agreed whereby the necessary movement and accountancy reports of civil material are submitted to Euratom. The inspectors have access to this material for verification in accordance with chapter 7 of the Euratom treaty.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any of the uranium imported from Durban, South Africa, on 28 February 1987 has since been withdrawn from safeguards under article 14 of the terms of the UK/Euratom/International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards agreement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any plutonium from safeguarded electricity board Magnox reactors has been exported to the United States of America since May 1979 under (a) the United States —United Kingdom mutual defence agreement of 1958, under 1959 amendment, (b) International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and (c) Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 11 March 1988 at column 362. Since 1979, there have been no transfers to the United States of plutonium derived from safeguarded electricity board Magnox reactors under the United Kingdom — United States defence agreement.

Aluminium Industry

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the secure supply of electricity at reasonable cost to the aluminium industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received one representation in recent months from the aluminium industry about the cost of electricity.

Berkeley Magnox Reactor Power Station

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received from the nuclear installations inspectorate concerning safety measures at the Berkeley Magnox power station on the River Severn; what action he proposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 21 April 1988 at column 530. I have received a copy of the report and the CEGB is now considering its findings.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give for each year from 1979 the level of aid, in constant 1988 prices, made available to Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is given in 1987 prices. This is the latest year for which figures are available.

Gross bilateral aid (£'000)

Year	£'000
1979	11,500
1980	7,000
1981	7,300
1982	2,400

Mozambique also receives aid from multilateral agencies to which Britain contributes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Voluntary Restraint Arrangements

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington on 30 March, Official Report, column 478, he will set out in tabular form (a) the date on which each inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangement listed is believed to have come into effect, (b) the date on which it was first known to his Department and, when appropriate, (c) the date on which his Department informed the industry concerned that it saw no case for continuation and (d) the date on which it lapsed.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information under (a), (c) and (d) is listed in the table. It is no longer possible to identify the date when the Government first became aware of the arrangements in each case.

[1] Lapsed 1985-86.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangement covering the import of special steels from Spain.

(2) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangement covering the import of music centres from (a) Japan, (b) the Republic of Korea and (c) Taiwan;

(3) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements covering the import of stainless steel cutlery from (a) Japan, (b) the Republic of Korea;

(4) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements covering the import of colour televisions from (a) Japan, (b) Singapore, (c) the Republic of Korea and (d) Taiwan;

(5) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements covering the import of pottery from Japan;

(6) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements covering the import of (a) fork lift trucks, (b) machinery centres, (c) numerically controlled lathes, (d) cars and (e) commercial vehicles from Japan;

(7) whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangement covering the import of monochrome televisions from (a) Singapore, (b) the Republic of Korea, (c) Taiwan and (d) Thailand.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to my written answer today to a similar question raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton).

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will estimate the effect on prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements that covered the import of (a) pottery and (b) footwear from Taiwan.

Mr. Alan Clark: As explained in the written answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 478-89, the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements on imports of pottery and footwear from Taiwan lapsed. It was unnecessary for the Government to carry out a full examination of the impact of the arrangements of prices, employment, domestic output and import volumes.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 1365, what estimate his Department has of the effects of specific voluntary restraint arrangements on employment, prices domestic output or import volumes; and if he will publish the figures for each of the voluntary restraint arrangements named in his answer on 30 March, Official Report, columns 379-80.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 April 1988]: When reviewing the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements, estimates are made of the impact of these arrangements on the protected industries, on customers and the United Kingdom economy as a whole. The advice I received contained commercially confidential information and I am not therefore in a position to make it available. In all cases where the Governmemt advised the industry concerned that it saw no case for continuing the inter-industry restraint arrangement, I was satisfied that the net cost to the economy outweighed any benefit to the industry of continuation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the written answer of 30 March, Official Report, columns 478-9, whether Her Majesty's Government has sought to discourage the United Kingdom footwear industry from signing a renewed voluntary restraint arrangement with the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 April 1988]: No. The position is under review. But the industry is aware the Government also has wider concerns including the net impact of such arrangements on consumers and on the United Kingdom economy as a whole.

Pillows

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) why feather and polyester pillows have been included in the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations;

(2) what evidence he has to suggest that feather-filled pillows and polyester pillows are toxic when burning;

(3) when he expects the BSI flammability committee TCM/30 to report its findings on the flammability of pillows;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report any research findings which identify pillows as a particular fire hazard.

Mr. Butcher: Pillows with little or no fire resistance can contribute to bed fires in much the same way as scatter cushions on upholstered furniture can pose a hazard. Accordingly the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations propose identical requirements to improve the fire performance of pillows and scatter cushions. Combustion-modified foams will be the only permitted foam filling in furniture and these ancillary items.

Non-foam fillings in furniture, cushions, and pillows also pose a fire hazard, and the regulations should address this. Feather and polyester pillows are readily ignitable. Account has also to be taken of their propensity to produce smoke and toxic gases. The fillings can give rapid rates of smoke obscuration, and, in the case of polyester, black smoke. They also give off significant amounts of carbon monoxide. In addition, feathers give off toxic gases of hydrogen cyanide and of nitrates.

The British Standards Institution is considering a flammability specification for pillows, but this will not be completed in time to call it up in the regulations.

Public Purchasing

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he estimates will be the effect on industry of the changes in public purchasing provisions by 1992.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Completing the single market by 1992 will mean that purchases by Governments and public bodies should reflect fair competition not national identity. United Kingdom firms will have greater access to a European-wide public sector market which accounts for 15 per cent. of the European Community's gross domestic product, but they should also be prepared for increased competition here.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service (Policy)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Attorney-General what is the policy of the Crown Prosecution Service concerning the institution of prosecutions against police officers (a) in cases where criminal charges against others are subsequently dropped and damages are awarded against the police and (b) in cases where a defendant is acquitted and subsequently brings an action for wrongful arrest, false imprisonment or malicious prosecution and is awarded damages against the police.

The Attorney-General: The policy of the Crown Prosecution Service concerning the institution of criminal proceedings against police officers follows the criteria contained in the code for crown prosecutors, issued under Section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. Staleness occasioned by the time occupied by earlier court proceedings may acquire particular significance.

Public Records (Copies)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Attorney-General what are the costings figures used, and assumptions made, in respect of (a) and A3 copy and (b) an A4 copy of a document at the Public Record Office.

The Attorney-General: Photocopies of documents at the Public Record Office are made on A3 size paper only. Reprographic fees are calculated to recover in full the running costs and capital charges attributable to the service, and are based on past levels of costs and volumes of business, with allowances for expected future variations. The current fee of 26p per copy, inclusive of 3·39p VAT, is based on figures for 1986-87 when 683,526 copies were made at a cost of £154,347.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to assess whether the current levels of pay for legally qualified staff of the Crown Prosecution Service are sufficient to maintain an effective service.

The Attorney-General: I take great interest in the development of a proper pay structure for those employed in the Government legal service. I consider that the proposed pay award to legally qualified staff in the Crown Prosecution Service, referred to in my answer of 21 April 1988 to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) is sufficient, together with allowances that are available, to maintain the effectiveness of existing services and to improve the attractiveness of such posts to potential recruits.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General how many legally qualified staff are currently employed by the Crown Prosecution Service; and how many vacancies for such staff currently exist.

The Attorney-General: On 31 March 1988 the Crown Prosecution Service employed 1,311 legally qualified staff as lawyers and had 459 vacancies for such staff.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General what steps are being taken to encourage lawyers to join the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service intends to supplement the existing recruitment arrangements with a number of new initiatives. The current monthly programme of competitions will continue but will focus on specific locations where staffing shortages exist.

In addition to this the other main initiatives under consideration are:

(i) sponsorship of non-qualified staff through legal training,
(ii) the provision of short term contracts of employment,
(iii) improved careers publicity,
(iv) research of the market for part-time working,
(v) secondments from outside organisations.

It is hoped that these initiatives, combined with the recent pay offer to legal staff, will increase the success of the current procedures which have resulted in the recruitment of around 500 lawyers since the inception of the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General whether any persons have been appointed by the Crown Prosecution Service to conduct criminal investigations; and whether there are any plans to make such appointments.

The Attorney-General: All criminal investigations are undertaken by the police, who are aided by specialist assistance as and when required.

Within the headquarters of the Crown Prosecution Service is the fraud investigation group, which undertakes the investigation and prosecution of serious and complex cases. The sixteen FIG lawyers control the cases from the outset and co-ordinate specialist assistance on a case by case basis in support of the police investigations. This specialist assistance includes investigative accountants within the fraud investigation group, the companies investigation branch of the Department of Trade and Industry, HM Customs and Excise, private sector accountants, liquidators, receivers and computer experts.

The fraud investigation group has no statutory power to investigate, unlike the newly created serious fraud office, which will be responsible from this month for the investigation and prosecution of the largest fraud cases in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

PRIME MINISTER

Nigeria

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 466, what account she took of the recommendations of the Justice Awoniy commission of inquiry into malpractices and wastages in Niger State that Nigeria repudiate the Biwater loan, blacklist the company for 10 years and report it to organisations involved in the United Nations water decade during the negotiations leading to Nigeria's request for finance to complete the project.

The Prime Minister: The ECGD has seen no evidence that the recommendations of the commission of inquiry which met in 1984 were accepted or acted upon by the Nigerian authorities.

Since then the Niger State Water Board (the buyer), Niger State Government (borrower of the United Kingdom loan) and the Federal Ministry of Finance and Economic Development on behalf of the Federal Military Government have reviewed the project and decided upon a basis for completion of the water scheme by Biwater Projects Ltd. In response to a specific request from the Nigerian federal authorities ECGD has been able to enter into negotiations in respect of support for a further loan to assist project completion.

Hughes Committee

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister whether the dossier of information submitted to her on 1 November 1984 by Mr. Colin Wallace was passed to the police for investigation; and which documents from the dossier were made available to the Hughes committee of inquiry into children's homes and hostels.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces on 20 July 1987 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) at column 93-94.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister what action was taken relating to the case of Mr. Colin Wallace following information forwarded by the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee in 1986 relating to false job descriptions, psychological warfare and propaganda.

The Prime Minister: Following consideration of the papers by the Ministry of Defence and other Departments involved, I wrote to the Chairman of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee explaining that the various allegations made by Mr. Wallace over many years had been fully and carefully investigated and no evidence had been found to substantiate any of them.

Security-Sensitive Posts

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister what is the practice of the Civil Service Commission towards the advertising of security-sensitive posts.

The Prime Minister: Recruitment schemes for which the Civil Service Commissioners are responsible have to be sufficiently publicised to the satisfaction of the commissioners. Normal practice is for these schemes to be advertised in the national press or appropriate professional publications. The information sent to applicants indicates whether security requirements apply to a particular scheme.

Civil Servants (Vetting)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy relating to the renewal of positive vetting for civil servants convicted of criminal offences.

The Prime Minister: In reaching a decision as to whether positive vetting clearance should be given, a Department takes into account all information which might have a bearing on the person's suitability for access to highly classified material.

Civil Servants (Press Briefings)

Mr. John: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set out the guidelines under which departmental civil servants are allowed to conduct press conferences or press briefings upon politically sensitive matters.

The Prime Minister: Civil servants are advised that in dealing with the media they must act on the advice of their Department's chief information officer who consults Ministers as necessary. Subject to this advice, officials may explain Government policy and give the factual background to it. They may also discuss the balance of consideration which led to a choice of policy. They must not trespass on the responsibilities of Ministers, and at all times they should preserve the political neutrality of the Civil Service. Press conferences or briefings on party political matters should be given only by Ministers.

Freemasonry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to require all Ministers to disclose to Parliament membership of any Masonic order.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy that any Home Secretary she may appoint in future must not be a member of any Masonic order.

The Prime Minister: No.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to list all those national and international voluntary organisations to which she belongs.

The Prime Minister: No.

Common Market (Funding)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if the provisional agreement made at the recent meeting of the European Council to increase the funding of the Common Market has now been finalised; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Work is continuing on the legally binding texts required to implement the conclusions of the European Council in Brussels on 11-13 February.

Engagements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 April.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 April.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 April.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 April.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others including one with the President of Zimbabwe. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with the Prime Minister of New Zealand.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students Union Presidents

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of student union presidents who are given a sabbatical year by their college or university; and what estimate he has as to the cost to public funds in 1987-88 or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The Department does not hold this information.

Further and Higher Education (Codes of Practice)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many institutions of higher and further education have drawn up codes of conduct since the enactment of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied that section 43(1) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 is being properly adhered to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The provisions of section 43 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 came into effect on 1 September 1987. Institutions were required to have issued by that date the codes of practice specified by the section; but they were not required to inform the Department that they had done so. The Government plan to evaluate the working of the section in its first year.

Students (Funding)

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional funding will be made available for mature and non-standard entry students at Dundee university.

Mr. Jackson: Financial support is available to students at Dundee university on the same basis as to students elsewhere. Mature students may be eligible for additional allowances. Entitlement to mandatory grant depends on the course attended and is not determined by reference to entry qualifications.

GCSE (Mathematics)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to improve the checking procedures for establishing the accuracy of mathematics examination papers set for the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE examining groups are responsible for the content of GCSE examinations, including the accuracy of examination papers. The Secondary Examinations Council is responsible for scrutinising the groups' procedures to ensure that the relevant GCSE national criteria are met. The Government look to the groups and the SEC to review procedures in the light of the first GCSE examinations this summer.

SCOTLAND

M8 (Newhouse and Baillieston)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with improvements to the M8 motorway between Newhouse and Baillieston; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have nothing to add at present to my answer to the hon. Member on 4 March, at column 666.

Baby Care Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent nurses working in Scotland in (a) hospital maternity units and (b) in special care baby units.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that groups of nurses cannot readily be identified from the statistics held centrally on the basis requested.

Midwives

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent qualified midwives working in Scotland (a) in hospital maternity units, (b) in special care baby units, (c) in education and (d) as community midwives.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible from the statistics held centrally readily to separate midwives working in hospital maternity units and those working in special care baby units. In the table a single figure is given for both groups under the heading hospital maternity units. Midwives working in the community may undertake health visiting and/or home nursing duties. They are shown separately in the table as combined duty nurses.

Scottish Courts Administration

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedure exists for the Scottish Courts Administration to notify housing authorities if their tenants have been given custodial sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such procedure exists.

Rents and Rates

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report, for each district authority in Scotland, for each of the years from 1985 to 1988, showing the average council rent and district rate in constant 1987 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The tables show the average council house rent and the average domestic rate bill in each local authority area.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what urgent measures are being implemented in order (a) to prevent further increase in crimes involving personal violence in Strathclyde; and (b) to give communities and voluntary groups more participation in the prevention and detection of crime, and in the rehabilitation of offenders.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 April 1988]: Through our general support for the police service and crime prevention measures, including the recently launched campaign "Crime—Together We'll Crack It", the Government are committed to creating a climate which minimises the opportunites for crime, including violence against the person. We also give a high priority to the expansion of the number of neighbourhood watch schemes and crime prevention panels within Strathclyde and elsewhere.

Council Property (Glasgow)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the level of interest shown by private landlords or companies in assuming responsibility for council property in Glasgow, and if he will name the companies and individuals and the areas they have shown interest in.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Since private landlords or companies interested in assuming responsibility for council properties in Glasgow would be in the first instance approach the owners of the property, I refer the hon. Member to the city of Glasgow district council for information about level of interest. However, as my right hon. and learned Friend announced in the House on 29 March 1988, he is aware that initiatives seeking to involve the private sector in the development of property at Castlemilk and Barlanark are being pursued.

Timber

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the area of land approved for forestry grant-aid in each of the six years to 31 March in each of the conservancies in Scotland; and if he will state the area of land afforested or restocked by the private forestry industry in each conservancy in each of those years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The information is as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE

Monitoring Surveys

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will seek the advice of a professional physical anthropologist on the categories of human groups used in Civil Service monitoring surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: No.

THE ARTS

Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what advice he gives to the Arts Council or regional arts associations on the economic multiplier that would be most appropriate to use to estimate the economic impact of arts expenditure.

Mr. Luce: It is for the Arts Council to make its own case, using whatever data it wishes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of all civil servants were working in Yorkshire and Humberside in (a) 1979 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Brooke: The proportion of all civil servants working in Yorkshire and Humberside was 5·2 per cent. in 1979 and 5·8 per cent. in 1987.

Treasure Trove

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is now in a position to announce his conclusions following the review of ex gratia awards to finders of treasure trove; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: I have carefully considered the report of this review (a copy of which I am today placing in the Library), in consultation with ministerial colleagues in the Home Office, the Department of the Environment and the Office of Arts and Libraries.

Her Majesty's Government accept all the report's recommendations. I am sure it is right that the objective of making ex gratia awards to finders of treasure trove should be to encourage the prompt and proper reporting and handing-in of finds. Finders who act properly and lawfully will continue to receive ex gratia awards equal to the full value of their finds, as assessed by the independent treasure trove reviewing committee, or, if no public museum wishes to acquire them, will have their finds returned to them. Awards will, however, continue to be made only to finders of treasure trove, and not to landlords or employers who are not themselves finders.

Where, as happens in a small minority of cases, there is evidence of illegal activity in relation to a find, I agree with the report's conclusion that the criminal law should be seen as the principal sanction. But, in making decisions about ex gratia awards in those cases, Ministers will wish to take account of criminal convictions of finders arising from the circumstances of a find. Ministers will also wish to consider whether an ex gratia award should either be refused or abated where:

- there is evidence of illegal activity in relation to a find but, for whatever reason, no prosecution has been mounted;
- there was unreasonable delay between making and reporting a find;
- all the relevant circumstances surrounding a find were not reported;
- there is evidence that only part of a find has been handed in;
- there are reasonable grounds for believing that a find was made elsewhere than on the alleged site; or
- there are other factors which it is appropriate to take into account in individual cases.

Decisions about the level of awards in such cases will be taken in the light of the particular circumstances of each case. The intention, however, will be to reflect a balance between the objective of those awards to encourage the prompt and proper reporting of finds, and the need for those awards not themselves to provide an incentive for illegal or improper behaviour.

The report makes a number of recommendations for speeding up the handling of treasure trove. These are designed to achieve a target time of no more than nine months, and ideally less, between the reporting of most finds and the payment of ex gratia awards. I believe that target strikes a reasonable balance between finders' legitimate expectations that they should receive their awards promptly and the work involved, not least by national and local museums and by coroners, between reporting a find and payment of an award. We are taking steps to inform those involved in each stage of the process, and I hope that they will do everything in their power to meet the suggested targets. I shall wish to review performance in about 18 months. I accept the report's administrative recommendations and these will be implemented. I understand that, as also recommended by the report, the Home Office intends to review and update its advice to coroners about treasure trove inquests.

European Monetary System

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the impications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the European monetary system of the completion of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The Government's policy remains that the United Kingdom will join the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system when the conditions are right.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The amount spent on official hospitality was £53,457 in 1987-88.

WALES

Homelessness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homeless people in Wales have previously been admitted to mental hospitals; and what this figure represents as a percentage of the total number of homeless persons.

Mr. Grist: This information is not collected centrally.

Privatisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had discussions with the trade unions regarding (i) water privatisation, (ii) privatisation of the electricity industry and (iii) local government services privatisation legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have formally sought the views of the Wales TUC and the trade unions on the proposals contained in the Local Government Act and on detailed aspects of implementation. I have met representatives of the Wales TUC to discuss the competition provisions contained in the Act, but I have not discussed with the trade unions either water privatisation or the privatisation of the electricity industry. The latter of course is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. The trade unions and the Wales TUC have had the opportunity to comment on the various documents setting out the Government's proposals in these areas.

Towyn (Road Crossing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to alert all visitors to Towyn that the Sandbank road crossing is unsafe for pedestrians and therefore a danger to the public; and if he will make it his policy to advise such visitors to avoid this area until such time as British Rail erects a pedestrian bridge.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Lady and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has made to the report of the docklands liaison group of the DE-Manpower Services Commission of October 1987; and if he intends to implement recommendation 3.6 of the report.

Mr. Nicholls: The docklands liaison group report on employment and training services in docklands was prepared for regional management in the Employment Service and the Manpower Services Commission.

With regard to recommendation 3.6 of the report, the Employment Service accepts the need to improve the accessibility of its services to unemployed people in some parts of London docklands.

We are examining the possibility of relocating the Isle of Dogs jobcentre from its current sit in the Cubitt Town library building. But in the meantime we shall be looking to maintain the best possible service to local residents from that site.

We have set up a new-style office at Bermondsey to locate all our services for unemployed people together in one place. In order to bring the opportunities available in docklands to a greater number of people, we are considering a range of outreach measures, including:

—a mobile facility to take services and information about vacancies and other employment and training opportunities to local communities, and —the use of new technology to provide a wider network of information points, giving access to details of job and training opportunities, across the whole area.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the budget of the docklands liaison group; and if any additional resources to fund the work of the group have been made available.

Mr. Nicholls: The docklands liaison group acts as a single contact point to enable the Employment Service and the Manpower Services Commission to co-ordinate their programmes and services with other interested bodies and the private sector in London docklands. Sufficient funding for this task is made available from the local budgets of the Employment Service and the MSC.

In 1987-88 the Manpower Services Commission spent around £17·3 million on training-related programmes in the docklands boroughs. The Employment Service has a network of nine jobcentres and six benefit offices in the docklands area, employing 280 staff at a cost of about £2·8 million in the last financial year.

Self-Employment

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the trends in self-employment in the past five years.

Mr. Lee: Between December 1982 and December 1987 there was an estimated net increase of 727,000 in the number of self-employed people in Great Britain.

Tourism

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the data and statistics available to the tourist industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department has, together with the British Tourist Authority, commissioned a review of the statistical needs of the tourism industry. We expect the report from the consultants in early summer.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of employment in (a) Greater London and (b) Ealing, North in numerical and percentage terms; what was the comparable figure (i) one year and (ii) two years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The available information is as follows:

Greater London

December of each year	Civilian employed labour force	Civilian employed labour force as a percentage of the civilian working population
1985	3,861,000	90·6
1987[1]	3,937,000	92·2

[1] The latest date for which figures are available.

Information for parliamentary constituencies covers only estimates of the numbers of civilian employees in employment, excluding self-employed people, and the unemployed. At September 1984, the latest date for which the figures are available, there were 24,800 employees in employment in the Ealing, North constituency. The sum of this September 1984 estimate and the numbers of unemployed claimants in the constituency at the same date gives a total figure of 28,600.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of employment in each of the last five years in (a) publishing, (b) printing, (c) the record industry, (d) the film industry, (e) broadcasting (radio), (f) broadcasting (TV and cable) and (g) hotels and catering.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not available for all the industries specified.

The available information is as follows:

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of employment in each of the last five years in (a) the arts, (b) sport and (c) recreation and leisure.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not available for precisely the categories specified. The available information is as follows:

Employees in Employment in Great Britain

December of each year	Recreational and Cultural Services (97)[1]	Of which Sport and other Recreational Services (9791)

The figures have not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Northern Region

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in the northern region in the last three years; and how much unemployment in the region has fallen in that time.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. Between December 1984 and December 1987 (the latest date for which comparable figures are available) the civilian employed labour force in the northern region has shown a net increase of 42,000. In the same period the number of unemployed people including school leavers has fallen by 39,000. The figures have not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the measures currently being taken by his Department to provide training and employment in the northern region.

Mr. Lee: The following measures are available in the northern region:

YTS: High-quality training and planned work experience for school leavers.
New job training scheme: training for adults who wish to add to or learn new skills.
Training for enterprise: training for business owners and managers.
Open learning: provides access to training, particularly for supervisors and technicians.
Other adult training: a wide range of full and part-time courses offering training closely matched to local opportunities.
Training grants for employers: practical and financial help for training employees and recruits.
Restart programme: counselling and courses to help long-term unemployed people.
Community programme: community-based work and training.
Jobclubs: coaching, facilities and support for people looking for work.
Jobstart allowance: helps long-term unemployed people back into work.
Community industry: work experience for disadvantaged young people.
Travel to interview scheme: financial help for those who need to travel to job interviews.
Jobshare: an incentive to employers to create part-time jobs.
Voluntary projects programme: experience from working on voluntary projects.
Enterprise allowance scheme: financial help for unemployed people wishing to become self-employed or start their own business.
Small firms service: free information and counselling for new or existing small businesses.
Tourism: advice and financial support for tourism projects.
Loan guarantee scheme: guarantees for bank loans made to businesses.
Special needs: specific help for the disabled and ethnic minorities.
All these measures are listed in the "Action for Jobs" booklet, available from any of my Department's offices.

My Department is the lead Department in the Tyne and Wear city action team, set up to assist with regeneration in the Tyne and Wear area, and in a co-ordinating team in Cleveland, and is also participating in task forces in Hartlepool and Middlesbrough.

Youth Employment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being considered to boost youth employment prospects in Houghton and Washington.

Mr. Cope [holding reply Monday 25 April]: The employment prospects of young people in Houghton and Washington as elsewhere are being boosted by the high quality training and work experience offered by YTS. From September, the Government are extending their guarantee of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in work or further education. As a result, no young person under 18 need be unemployed.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the Labour force in part-time employment were in receipt of family income supplement at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

Part-time work is defined, in the employment statistics, as 30 hours a week or less. Family income supplement was normally available only to those working at least 30 hours a week. However, single parents could claim FIS if working not fewer than 24 hours a week. It is estimated that in March 1986 (the latest date for which information is available) single parents working 24 to 29 hours a week and receiving FIS represented under 1 per cent. of all employees working 30 hours a week or fewer (including those working fewer than 24 hours).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

76. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's contribution to the cost of the United Nations peacekeeping force in Cyprus; and what proportion of the contingent is manned by British forces.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures for the financial year 1987-88 are incomplete. The outturn for 1986-87, the last year for which figures are available, was £20,169,394 net of recoveries. The British contingent is, according to the latest available figure, 741 officers and men out of a total United Nations force in Cyprus of 2,122.

Warsaw Pact (Military Data)

77. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent exchanges of military data on (i) conventional force deployments and (ii) battlefield and tactical nuclear weapons have taken place with the Warsaw pact.

78. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent exchanges of military data on (i) conventional force deployment and (ii) battlefield and tactical nuclear weapons have taken place with the Warwaw pact.

Mr. Mellor: At the Stockholm conference on confidence and security building measures NATO delegations proposed exchanges of information on conventional force levels and dispositions. Warsaw pact delegations rejected this proposal. The September 1986 Stockholm agreement is therefore limited to exchanges of information on certain military activities in the field.

As for nuclear weapons, the United States and the Soviet Union have exchanged information on systems covered by the intermediate nuclear forces treaty. We and other NATO Governments regularly publish detailed information on both our conventional and nuclear capabilities. We have passed this information to Warsaw pact representatives during arms control discussions and urged them to reciprocate. So far they have not done so.

Namibia

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any meetings with, made approaches to, or received approaches from, the Transitional Government of National Unity in South West Africa—Namibia since 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not recognise the Transitional Government of National Unity. However, on 5 February 1987 I met Mr. Shipanga and Mr. Katjiuonga in their capacity as leaders of internal Namibia parties.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Transitional Government of National Unity in South West Africa—Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not recognise the Transitional Government of National Unity, nor any unilateral attempt by South Africa to transfer power in Namibia.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is his policy on recent announcements by the South African Government that the South African administrator-general in South West Africa-Namibia is to be given additional powers;

(2) What assessment he has made of South Africa's policy towards South West Africa-Namibia in the light of recent developments.

Mrs. Chalker: We wish to see Namibia independent. This will not be furthered by granting the South African administrator general new powers. What is needed is prompt implementation of the United Nations plan.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any meetings with, made approaches to, or received approaches from, Mr. Peter Kalangula, the Owambo leader, or his representatives, since 1983.

Mrs. Chalker: No, but members of the British embassy, including the ambassador, maintain contact with Mr. Kalangula. Most recently Her Majesty's ambassador saw Mr. Kalangula in Windhoek last month.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on Mr. Kalangula's position with regard to attempts to find a political solution in South West Africa-Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We commend Mr. Kalangula's support for the early implementation of Security Council resolution 435.

South West Africa People's Organisation

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any meetings with, made approaches to, or received approaches from the South West Africa People's Organisation, since 1983.

Mrs. Chalker: Meetings with SWAPO representatives take place from time to time. Most recently I met Mr. Sam Nujoma on 26 October 1987.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government policy towards the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: SWAPO is a party to the negotiations for a Namibian settlement. We do not recognise its claim to be the "sole authentic representative of the Namibian people" and we oppose its use of violence.

Chile

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is considering sending observers to monitor the plebiscite in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We will consider whether to send observers to the plebiscite if invited to do so by the Chilean Government.

Israel

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the action of the Israeli Government on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip during the weekend beginning 15 April.

Mr. Mellor: We deplore the deaths and injuries inflicted on 16 and 17 April and again call on the Israeli authorities, pending their withdrawal, to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law and human rights standards.

Israel (Nuclear Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the conviction in the Israeli courts of Mordecai Vanunu on charges of leaking secrets of the Israeli nuclear weapons production facility at Dimona, he will initiate a renewed evaluation of Israeli nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Mellor: No. Israel's ambiguous position will continue to give rise to suspicion until it signs the non-proliferation treaty and opens its nuclear facilities to international inspection.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 31 March, Official Report, column 628, as corrected on 12 April, Official Report, column 34, on representations made to the Israeli Government to sign the non-proliferation treaty, what response was received in October 1987; and if any further communication took place as a result.

Mr. Mellor: The permanent under-secretary of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was told at the talks referred to by the hon. Member that the Israeli Government saw no prospect of Israeli signature of the non-proliferation treaty before the conclusion of a general peace settlement in the region. We have received a similar response, most recently in April, when we have raised the non-proliferation treaty with the Israeli Government.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for safeguards arrangements under the 1970 treaty of Almelo, between the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany, of plans for URENCO to collaborate with Duke Power Company of the United States of America on a nuclear fuel plant in the United States of America.

Mrs. Chalker: If these plans come to fruition, the Governments of the United Kingdom, Federal Republic of Germany and Netherlands will ensure that appropriate safeguards procedures are applied at any facility constructed in the United States pursuant to article VII of the treaty of Almelo.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what safeguards arrangements exist to cover nuclear materials processed by the Anglo-Dutch-Federal German URENCO company for Boston Edison Co. and Sacramento Municipal District Utility in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Material processed by URENCO in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA agreement. Similar arrangements apply to URENCO Dutch and German plants.

Western European Union

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in his discussions relating to the enlargement of the Western European Union to include Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Mellor: The Western European Union ministerial meeting in the Hague on 18-19 April invited Spain and Portugal to open discussions on how they would meet the obligations of Western European Union membership contained in the modified Brussels treaty and the Western European Union platform.

Malaysia

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Malaysian Government.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Malaysia, Singapore and Brunei from 5 to 10 April. We enjoy close and developing relations with all three countries. In Malaysia he had valuable discussions with the Deputy Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and the Minister for Education on bilateral links and a range of regional and international issues.

As part of our common stand on drugs issues, we agreed in principle to work for a reciprocal agreement on the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets.

Tigre and Eritrea

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he or his ministerial colleagues has had with the Ethiopian government and others about resolving peacefully the conflicts in Tigre and Eritrea; and what is his assessment of the prospect of peace talks taking place in either area, as a result of United Nations or EEC initiatives.

Mrs. Chalker: The most recent occasions were when I visited Ethiopia in April 1987 and when my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development did so in January this year. My hon. Friend had planned to return this month but has postponed his visit at the request of the Ethiopian Government.

We have also discussed the conflicts in Tigre and Eritrea with our European partners. The Community agreed a declaration last week urging a peaceful solution. We earnestly hope that all parties in this tragic situation will put humanitarian before military considerations.

Defence Equipment (Sales)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arms sales are under way to Israel's Arab neighbours; and whether he proposes to resume arms sales to Israel.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to disclose details of sales of defence equipment overseas. We maintain restrictions on arms sales to Israel because of the continuing Israeli military presence in Lebanon.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek a further opportunity of raising with the Soviet Foreign Minister the plight of the long-term refuseniks Michael Kremen, Boris Chernobilsky and Oscar Menoelev, who are still waiting for exit visas.

Mr. Mellor: Michael Kremen and Boris Chernobilsky are among those cases about which we have expressed concern to the Soviet authorities. We shall continue to take suitable opportunities to raise these cases, together with that of the Mendeleyevs and others about which representations have been made to us. Bilateral talks on human rights between officials, which we hope will take place soon, will be one such opportunity.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is being made publicly available by Her Majesty's Government on protection and decontamination equipment for those affected by chemical weapon attacks in northern Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to make such information available publicly. Information or equipment suitable for protection or decontamination is available from commercial sources although the supply of any such equipment from the United Kingdom to Iran or Iraq would be subject to export control. With our agreement a number of chemical weapon victims have received private medical treatment in the United Kingdom.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wheat and Barley

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the effect on the United Kingdom intervention price of (a) wheat and (b) barley of a devaluation of the green pound by: (a) 5 per cent., (b) 9 per cent., and (c) to parity.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Feedwheat and barley have the same intervention price of 170·47 ecu per tonne which, at the present green rate, is equivalent to £111·85 per tonne.

Devaluations sufficient to reduce the cereals monetary compensatory amount by the amounts specified and to parity would give the following intervention prices:

(a) £116·99 per tonne
(b) £121·46 per tonne
(c) £127·29 per tonne

European Community (Assistance to Farmers)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Ministry has as to the assistance given by other European Community Agriculture Ministers to their farmers; and if he will make a statement setting out the comparisons between aid provided in other European Community countries and the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: Responsibility for ensuring that national aids are in conformity with the treaty of Rome rests with the European Commission, and member states are required to notify such aids to it for approval.

When we are informed of a national aid which appears to contravene Community law we do not hesitate to bring the matter to the attention of the Commission.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the sheepmeat production ceiling for the United Kingdom in 1988-89 set by the European Community; what it was in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Community has not set sheepmeat production ceilings for either year. However, agreement has been reached on a budgetary stabiliser for this sector, as for many other CAP commodities. This is to be based on maximum guarantee thresholds set at the 1987 ewe flock in Great Britain and the rest of the Community and provides for 1988 and beyond a 1 per cent. cut in the basic and derived support prices for sheepmeat for each 1 per cent. overshoot in the MGLs. The detailed regulations are being finalised in discussions in the Council and elsewhere.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes have been announced by the European Commission in the mechanism for calculating the premium payments on ewe headage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In its proposals for the review of the sheepmeat regime, the European Commission envisages new methods of calculating annual ewe premia throughout the Community based on EC-12 market prices. No decisions have yet been taken on these or other aspects of the Commission's proposals.

New Zealand (Lamb Imports)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position regarding New Zealand's lamb imports under the forthcoming general agreement on tariffs and trade talks.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In its proposals for reform of the EC's sheepmeat regime, the Commission has proposed discussions with third countries with a view to stabilising their import quantities of both frozen and chilled products, and of improving prices. The trade is currently controlled by voluntary restraint agreements negotiated between the EC and the main third countries. These set annual import quantities in exchange for a halving of the EC import duty to 10 per cent. When the Commission has developed a draft mandate for these discussions, we shall study it closely.

Lean Meat Prediction System

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to follow the example of the Dutch Government and finance the adoption of the Fat-O-Meater lean meat prediction system by the processing industry in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The optical probe, already widely used in the United Kingdom, will be authorised for use here under the EC Pig Carcase Grading Regulations, which will take effect on 1 January next year. Slaughterhouses will, therefore, be able to continue to use their existing equipment for the lean meat prediction of pig carcases which will be required by these regulations.

Pig Industry

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from representatives of the British pig industry regarding their current economic situation.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are keeping in close touch with representatives of the pig producers over the weak state of the market and monetary compensatory amounts. In recent weeks prices appear to have stabilised, while United Kingdom pigmeat MCAs have fallen from −10·9 to −6·1 per cent. due to the strengthening of sterling. Our objective continues to be the elimination of United Kingdom MCAs in this sector.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether environmental health officers throughout Staffordshire have been advised to look out for radioactive sheep from Cumbria and north Wales in the 1988 lambing season.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 April 1988]: In line with arrangements agreed with district and county councils, my officials have kept the chief emergency planning officer of Staffordshire county council fully informed about the introduction and development of the scheme under which sheep may be moved out of the restricted areas of Cumbria and north Wales. This includes details of the arrangements for this season's lambs. It is for the authority itself to ensure that the information reaches all the appropriate council officials within the county.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to introduce the sample monitoring for radioactivity of sheep which have been moved from Cumbria and north Wales to Staffordshire for further fattening.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Additional sample monitoring is unnecessary. Sheep moved out of the restricted areas of Cumbria and north Wales must either already have satisfied a monitoring test or been paint-marked to show that they may not yet be slaughtered. These marked sheep will be released for slaughter only when national re-monitoring data show that it is safe to remove the restriction on all sheep painted with the particular colour.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications were made, by parish, in 1986 and 1987, respectively, to the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis for removal of badgers; and how many were granted.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The number of applications made to the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis for removal of badgers during 1986 and 1987, listed by parish, are as follows:

Animals (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Ron Davies To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidences of herd breakdown due to tuberculosis were notified in each of the last five years; and if he will give the information by parish and list, in each case, the number for which the cause was unexplained.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Information cannot be provided for individual parishes without disproportionate cost. The table gives the total figures for Great Britain for the last five years for which information is available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Patient Expenditure (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in 1986-87 by the Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Newton: For patient treatment costing purposes all hospitals are classified into a series of standard types which reflect the principal use to which their beds are allocated and an overall average cost or expenditure per patient is thus not determined. For figures on average annual treatment costs of in-patients and out-patients by type of hospital for the Trent region as a whole, I refer the hon. Member to the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1985-86)—copies of which are held in the Library. For similar information detailed to individual hospitals and units the hon. Member way wish to contact the chairman of the Trent regional health authority who may be able to assist.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities or regional health authorities, which are due to receive money from the allocation for hospital and community health services announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement.

Mr. Newton: All health authorities in England have benefited from the increase in spending on the hospital and community health services announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Autumn Statement. My statement to the House on 16 December 1987 was followed by the publication on 23 December of a circular (HC(87)37) describing how resources were to be distributed among regional health authorities; this was followed in turn by the issue of more detailed initial cash limits to each RHA on 14 January. Allocations to districts based on those cash limits have since been made by regions.

Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the levels of spending on (a) the mentally handicapped and (b) the mentally ill in each of the health authorities in the area of the North West regional health authority for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Newton: Information on health authority expenditure by type of patient is not collected centrally. However, hospital costing returns submitted to the Department do show expenditure on hospitals of different types. Costing returns in respect of community health services show expenditure relating to the major areas of activity only. Thus we have information on expenditure by hospitals categorised as "Mental Handicap" and "Mental Illness", but not on expenditure on the growing volume of activity in psychiatric units in general hospitals etc. or within the community health services. Such costs are not separately identifiable centrally.

The following tables, derived from the hospital costing returns give the expenditure by hospitals categorised as mental handicap and mental illness in each of the district health authorities in the North Western region since their establishment on 1 April 1982.

[2] For 1983-84 only, the health authority included expenditure incurred at Scott House within Community Health Services.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 445, if he will report on progress within the United Kingdom on implementation of the United Nations world programme of action concerning disabled persons.

Mr. Scott: As I said in my earlier reply on 29 March at column 445 the two reports are by the Secretary General of the United Nations. Report A/42/551 was in response to a request to the Secretary General for information on (a) the establishment and reinforcement of national committees as focal points for the United Nations decade (b) bilateral assistance relating to projects concerning the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and equalisation of opportunities and (c) the voluntary fund. Report A/42/561 sets out an evaluation by the Secretary General of the implementation of the world programme of action during the first half of the decade 1983-92.

The United Kingdom Government support the overall objectives of the United Nations world programme of action and takes them into account when developing policies for disabled people. The Government, the statutory authorities and the voluntary sector are involved in the development of policy and services within the United Kingdom for disabled people. We also participate at the international level in activities undertaken by the European Community, the Council of Europe and Rehabilitation International. Therefore, given these involvements, we do not feel that a national committee specifically related to overseeing the United Nations programme would serve any useful purpose.

With respect to overseas aid, rather than contribute to the voluntary fund we support the general aims of the world programme by assisting specific projects under our bilateral aid programmes administered by the Overseas Development Administration. We also jointly fund, with various British charities, rehabilitation programmes and projects to assist disabled people.

With regard to the recommendation of the governing council of the United Nations development programme that a global campaign be promoted to raise awareness and mobilise resources in support of the objectives of the world programme of action, we would like to await specific proposals from the Secretary General on how this could proceed.

Electoral Register (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many voters there are on the new electoral register for the Isle of Wight.

Mrs. Currie: There are 100,785 parliamentary electors on the 1988 register for the Isle of Wight.

Electors

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the English electoral quota for 1988-89.

Mrs. Currie: The electoral quota for England—that is, the total electorate divided by the number of parliamentary constituencies—is 69,688 based on the 1988 register.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which are currently the five largest and five smallest parliamentary constituencies showing in each case the number of registered electors on the new registers.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary constituency	1988 Electorate
(i) Five largest
Milton Keynes	103,210
Isle of Wight	100,785
East Hampshire	90,013
Huntingdon	89,657
Swindon	89,138
(ii) Five smallest
Surbiton	45,320
Kensington	45,998
Chelsea	46,763
Newham North West	47,814
Hammersmith	47,888

Shenley Hospital

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the future of Shenley hospital; if there is a closure date; what is the most recent figure for the population in Shenley; and how many patients have been there for more than five years.

Mrs. Currie: The aim of our policy in the mental health field is that every health district should provide a comprehensive range of services for mentally ill people, from long-term in-patient care for the severely and chronically ill to domiciliary support for those who can live near normal lives at home.

The latest figures held centrally for the numbers of in-patients in Shenley hospital is 805, as at 31 December 1986. Figures are not available centrally on the length of stay of resident in-patients. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Parkside health authority for information on plans for the future of Shenley hospital, and detailed local statistics.

Eye Tests

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Wisbech and West Norfolk district health authority had eye tests in the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate he can make of how many would not have received free tests if his Department's new regulations had applied at the time.

Mr. Newton: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the eye tests carried out under the general ophthalmic services. These are the responsibility of the family practitioner committee and it is not possible to provide information for particular district health authority areas. However, in the Norfolk FPC and Cambridge FPC, each of which includes part of the area covered by the Wisbech and West Norfolk DHA, the numbers of sight tests carried out during the year ended 31 December 1987 were 156,122 and 144,810 respectively. When implemented, the provision of the Health and Medicines Bill will still permit NHS sight tests to be provided for children under 16, full-time students under 19, those on low incomes, the registered blind and partially sighted and people with diabetes or glaucoma who are referred for a test by the doctor managing their condition. It is estimated that these groups currently account for a little over one third of sight tests.

Tobacco

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what studies his Department has carried out on the effectiveness of the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 in preventing the purchase of tobacco products by children under the age of 16 years;

(2) what evidence there is of levels of usage by children under the age of 16 years of tobacco products of the type he recently announced his proposals to ban.

Mrs. Currie: Biennial surveys are carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of the smoking habits of schoolchildren aged 11 to 16. In 1986 it was found that 89 per cent. of regular smokers in this age group claimed that shops were a regular source of their cigarettes. In the same year there were 17 prosecutions of shopkeepers for selling cigarettes to children. Figures are not available on the use of oral tobacco products.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what monitoring procedures were set in hand to assess the effectiveness of the voluntary marketing agreement entered into by United States Tobacco International on 18 April 1985;

(2) if he has any evidence of breaches by United States Tobacco International of that company's voluntary agreement with his Department;

(3) what data on unit sales figures and numbers of users are available in respect of those oral tobacco products he proposes to ban.

Mrs. Currie: No special arrangements were set in hand to monitor the voluntary agreement with United States Tobacco International or to gather evidence of breaches, although we are aware of allegations concerning the marketing of Skoal Bandits to children which are the subject of court proceedings. Figures on the use of oral tobacco products are not available.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the size of the budget devoted to the fourth medical and health research programme from European Community resources connected with the use of chimpanzees in AIDS research.

Mr. Newton: In conformity with a recommendation of the European Parliament 5 million ecu have been committed to the European Community's fourth medical and health research programme to support centralised facilities for primates used in AIDS research. A separate figure for chimpanzees has not been identified.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what help he is giving to local authorities in London towards the costs of providing personal social services for people with AIDS or HIV infection.

Mr. Newton: I announced in February that £2 million is being made available in the current financial year to help towards the AIDS-related personal social services expenditure incurred by those local authorities in inner London where the greatest demands are faced. The borough councils are being informed today of the allocations they are to receive which are as follows:

Hammersmith and Fulham	474,180
Kensington and Chelsea	467,170
Westminster	245,000
Wandsworth	195,000
Lambeth	160,000
Camden	107,000
Southwark	92,500
Lewisham	89,500
Tower Hamlets	60,000
Islington	30,000
Hackney	30,000
Greenwich	27,200

I have been greatly encouraged by the consideration which the authorities have put into their bids and the sensitivity to the special needs of people with AIDS which they show. I hope that, in the light of our response, health and local authorities in inner London will continue to develop, on a jointly planned basis both the services necessary to ensure people with AIDS receive the care and support they need, and local initiatives to prevent the further spread of the disease.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the delay in the replacement of the university of Leeds nominee on Wakefield district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The appointment of members to Wakefield district health authority is the responsibility of the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Social Work

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his assessment of the ability of local authorities with unfilled social work posts to fulfill their statutory duties; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has about the current figure for unfilled vacancies in social work posts in local authority social services departments.

Mr. Newton: Such information is not held centrally, but we are aware of a recent report concerning problems in London. The social services inspectorate, which is keeping the position under review, is seeking to assist London authorities to ensure that staff are deployed to best effect and is paying particular attention to the management of child protection services.

Compulsory Removals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many compulsory removals under section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 were undertaken during 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of cot deaths in the north-west region during 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, and any subsequent period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is shown in the table, which gives the total number of deaths at age under one with any mention of cot death, sudden infant death syndrome or similar term on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it was the underlying cause of death, for usual residents of the north-west standard region.

Number of infant deaths with mention of cot death to usual residents of the North West Standard Region 1983-87[1]

Breast Screening

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what guidance has been given as to whether the proposals of the South East Thames regional health authority in respect of breast screening and assessment centres in the Medway comply with his Department's policy for identifying regional specialties;

(2) what is his policy on whether breast screening service and assessment centres should be a regional service or devolved to combined districts.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's policy for implementing the breast cancer screening service is that regional health authorities should plan their services on a supra-district basis according to the model recommended in the Forrest report, a copy of which is in the Library. The model proposed basic screening units each serving a population of about half a million (equivalent to two average-sized districts) and specialist assessment teams each taking referrals from up to three of the basic units, in order to maintain very high standards for the assessment of the abnormalities detected by mammographic screening, particularly the very small impalpable lesions. Copies of the guidance circulated to health authorities and family practitioner committees (DA(87)14 and EL(88)P/48) have been placed in the Library.

Plans for the breast cancer screening services to cover the whole of the South-East Thames region have not yet been received in the Department.

Medical Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the average waiting time for appeal hearings at each of his Department's medical appeal tribunals within the Yorkshire area.

Mr. Portillo: Reliable estimates of average waiting times for medical appeal tribunal hearings are not currently available. The president of social security appeal tribunals and medical appeal tribunals has advised that a revised management information system is being established for medical appeal tribunals which will enable the accurate measurement of waiting times, but that reliable estimates will not be available until later this year. I would be happy to refer any specific concerns of the hon. Member to the president.

Cancelled Treatments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many planned admissions for in-patients treatment in hospitals within the Wakefield district health authority were cancelled during 1987; and for what reasons.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Wakefield health authority to ascertain whether such information is available locally.

Family Credit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will encourage local authorities to include an application form for family credit when they distribute housing benefit application forms.

Mr. Portillo: Many local authorities already do send the claim form for family credit to those housing benefit claimants likely to be eligible for it. Some local authorities may not be able to do this for operational reasons but all will be aware of the importance we attach to encouraging the take-up of family credit.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to enable local authorities to disregard the element within family credit assumed to cover free school meals when assessing housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: No. An award of family credit cannot be disregarded in assessing housing benefit entitlement.

Stanley Royd Hospital, Wakefield

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into the outbreak of salmonella at Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield have been implemented.

Mrs. Currie: All health authorities have received copies of the committee of inquiry's report. Consideration has been given to each of the recommendations. Management guidelines have been published on hygiene and building issues, whilst further guidelines on hospital infection control and standard recipes will be circulated shortly.

Prisoners of War (Japan)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received from bodies representing prisoners of war in Japan during the second world war; if he has any plans to change present pension policy for prisoners or dependants of prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have received no recent representations, and have no plans to change the current long-standing war pension policy for far eastern prisoners of war. Under the war pensions scheme, a war disablement or widow's pension is payable where an ex-service man suffers any disability or illness or dies as a result of service in the armed forces, which includes periods spent as a prisoner of war. The Government fully recognise the great hardship and suffering endured by far eastern prisoners of war and their claims to war pension are given special and very careful consideration. All far eastern prisoners of war are offered a free tropical disease investigation to ascertain whether they are suffering any residual effects of disease suffered whilst a prisoner.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those drug companies which supplied benzodiazepines to the National Health Service during each of the years 1978 to 1986 inclusive; and what was the amount of payments made to each of these companies.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 31 March 1988]: In 1986, £28·2 million of benzodiazepines were dispensed in Great Britain in the family practitioner services of which £7·8 million were proprietary products. In 1985, the comparable figures were £33·1 million and £14·0 million. Information for earlier years is available only at disproportionate cost and information by company is not available. Companies supplying benzodiazepines to the FPS in 1986 were:

Abbott Laboratories Ltd.
Astra Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Beecham Group plc
DDSA Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Eli Lilly & Co. Ltd.
Farmitalia Ltd.
Fisons plc
Glaxo Group Ltd.
Hoechst Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Janssen Pharmaceuticals Ltd.

Searle & Co. Ltd.
Smith Kline and French Laboratories Ltd.
Smith & Nephew Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Steinhard Ltd.
Sterling-Winthrop Group Ltd.
Upjohn Ltd.
Wyeth Laboratories Ltd.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the latest numbers of winners and losers as a result of changes in housing benefit in Alyn and Deeside district council area, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of people claiming housing benefits in each housing authority in Scotland.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 April 1988]: The information available is given in the table. The figures represent the estimated number of benefit recipients in each authority.

The number of unsuccessful claims is not available.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to assist in the funding of the final testing of the HDA method of screening for cervical cancer; what is his assessment of the importance of the HDA procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about funding for a hydrolysed DNA assay procedure for early detection of cervical neoplasms; and what is his Department's current position regarding such funding.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 April 1988]: One of the 13 applications for funding of research and development in the field of automated cervical cancer screening that were reviewed in February by an ad hoc expert working group chaired by the Department's chief scientist was from Dr. Sincock of the Middlesex hospital and related to hydrolysed DNA assay. The expert group did not recommend that Dr. Sincock's project as submitted should be funded by the Department. Officials are now exploring with commercial interests the possibility of a joint funding venture that could pave the way for commercialisation of Dr. Sincock's assay.

Prescribed Drugs (Dependency)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what current reviews his Department is undertaking or has commissioned concerning prescribed drugs which lead to dependency; what advice has been given to doctors and patients on this issue; what estimate he has of the number of people regularly receiving the drug Lorezepam; what information he has as to any side-effects of Lorazepam, Valium and Librium; if he will take steps to establish an investigation into any detrimental side-effects of the drug Lorazepam; what guidelines are issued by his Department to general practitioners relating to Lorazepam; and if he will take steps to encourage Wyeth Laboratories to compensate people who have become dependent on Lorazepam.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has recently completed a review of the problem of dependence on benzodiazepines, and has issued advice to doctors and pharmacists in "Current Problems No. 21", which is in the Library. The Department is not currently conducting any specific reviews on dependence in relation to other prescribed drugs, but advice on the risks of dependence on certain drugs is contained in the British National Formulary which the Department sends regularly to all NHS doctors and pharmacists. It is for doctors to decide what advice to give to patients about the risk of dependence on prescribed medicines.

Over 3 million prescriptions for Lorazepam were issued in 1986 by general practitioners in Great Britain. It is not possible to estimate reliably how many patients were involved.

Information about side effects of Lorazepam, Valium and Librium is available in the ABPI data sheet compendium and in the BNF, copies of which are in the Library.

We have no current plans plans for a further investigation into the side effects of Lorazepam. In addition to the guidelines for all benzodiazepines, including Lorazepam, in "Current Problems No. 21" and the BNF, the data sheet provided by the manufacturer of Ativan, the leading brand, has recently been revised to the satisfaction of the CSM.

The issue of compensation is a matter for the parties concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Telford Development Corporation (Housing)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are his proposals for dealing with the future of those houses which are empty during the planned ballot on the future of Telford development corporation houses;

(2) what are his proposals for dealing with the future of those houses where there is a change of tenant after the planned ballot on the future of Telford development corporation houses but before ownership is changed;

(3) when he now expects to ballot Telford development corporation tenants about the future ownership of their houses;

(4) what are the financial terms for the transfer of Telford development corporation houses to (a) Wrekin district council, (b) housing associates and (c) tenants.

Mrs. Roe: We remain committed to consulting the tenants before any decisions are made about transferring the ownership of the new town housing in Telford, and it remains our policy to respect any individual preferences expressed through the consultation process. It is therefore essential that tenants be given all the information they need to make a considered choice.

In particular, it will be important that potential new landlords present tenants with realistically costed options, and in this connection I have had very much in mind the concern of Wrekin district council that the terms of transfer of the stock should be the same for local authority and other potential purchasers. This would require primary legislation, so transfer will not be possible for some time.

In the circumstances, tenant consultation now would be premature, and it would not be fair on the tenants to ask them to commit themselves now to a change which could not be implemented, perhaps for a couple of years. The best way to reduce the difficulties the hon. Member addresses in his other questions is to reduce as far as possible the interval between consultation and transfer. That is what we plan to do.

Gipsy Caravan Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the location of any official gipsy caravan sites within an area of outstanding natural beauty in England;

(2) if he will list those cases in which a local authority has compulsorily purchased land within an area of outstanding beauty for the purpose of establishing a gipsy caravan site; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The following local authority gipsy sites are in areas of outstanding natural beauty:

Southerham, East Sussex, (South Downs)
Redland Depot, Robertsbridge, East Sussex, (High Weald)
Hawkhurst, Kent (High Weald)
Pendle Camp, Merstham, Surrey (Surrey Hills)
Foster Down, Caterham, Surrey (Surrey Hills)
Chiseldon Camp, Swindon, Wiltshire (North Wessex Downs)
Copperkins Lane, Amersham, Bucks (Chilterns)
Whites Hill, Beaconsfield, Bucks (Chilterns)

I understand that in none of these cases were compulsory purchase powers used to acquire the sites.

Rates

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the impact of the non-domestic rates levied by local authorities on small firms as defined by the Bolton committee of inquiry in 1971; and what was the total amount raised from them in the 1987-88 financial year.

Mr. Howard: Information on non-domestic rates paid is not collected in a form which allows the identification of small firms.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has conducted an analysis of the possible effects of the introduction of a national non-domestic rate from April 1990, coupled with revaluation, on small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I expect to receive an analysis of the effects of the revaluation from the Inland Revenue once it has considered the information about rents it is currently collecting. I expect the results for small businesses to vary widely depending on their location and the nature of their business. My right hon. Friend has, of course, already announced that he intends to take powers to allow a more generous transition for small businesses.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in tabular form what estimates he has of the shares of non-domestic rates paid by large, medium and small businesses as defined by the size of their labour forces, or under the fourth EEC directive on company disclosures, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: I regret that no general estimates of this sort are available. Some information about rates paid by industry groups is available for years up to 1986.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much in money terms, real-terms and as a real-term percentage increase or decrease on 1979, the level of spending by local authorities under non-housing revenue current expenditure has increased or decreased in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The available information is as follows:

Net current expenditure on the rate fund revenue account[1]: 1979-80 to 1987-88
English local authorities

Homelessness

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much in money terms, real terms and as a real term percentage increase or decrease on 1979, local authority expenditure on the provision of accommodation for the homeless has increased or decreased in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is given in the table. It is based on information supplied by authorities in England and Wales to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Because of variations in the authorities responding the figures for different years are not strictly comparable.

Net Expenditure Per 1000 Population on Hostel and Bed and Breakfast Accommodation England and Wales

	Current prices	1986-87 percentage prices change
1979-80	282	472

1986-87	1,697	1,697	152

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to the provision of bed and breakfast accommodation for the homeless.

Mrs. Roe: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 24 March at column 191-92.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce statistical evidence for any year since 1979 to show which housing authorities over-claimed housing subsidies with a resulting over-provision in the supply estimates.

Mrs. Roe: I shall place the information in the Library.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to ensure that housing authorities do not over-claim housing subsidies.

Mrs. Roe: For the financial year 1988-89, any authority overclaiming in two of the three audited years (1984-85 to 1986-87), whose advance final claim for 1987-88 is late or reveals a third overclaim will have its instalments for the remainder of 1988-89 abated. The abatement will take into account the size of the latest overclaim.

The Department is also monitoring national movements in interest rates against those used by local authorities in their claims. High interest rates will be queried and, where appropriate, advance instalments of subsidy will be abated.

Similar measures were taken in the previous three years.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the £5 million increased provision for housing action trusts, clarifying what has led him to conclude that this additional provision is needed.

Mrs. Roe: The Government consider that the size of some areas of poor quality local authority housing, and the nature and extent of their problems, require novel and radical approaches beyond the normal run of local authority housing activity. They therefore propose to set up housing action trusts to tackle these problems; and have allocated £125 million (£5 million in 1988-89, £50 million in 1989-90 and £70 million in 1990-91) for this purpose.

Forestry

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the Countryside Commission's proposal that all afforestation schemes over five hectares should require specific planning permission under Town and Country Planning legislation and for the amendment of section 22 of the Town and Country Planning Act to bring afforestation of sites over 0·25 hectares within the meaning of the term development.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to bring forestry or afforestation within the scope of the planning system.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, for each London borough, for each year since 1980-81 (a) total housing investment programme expenditure (outturns) and (b) housing investment programme expenditure funded by capital receipts.

Mrs. Roe: Capital receipts, borrowing and revenue funding form a pool from which capital expenditure on each service is funded. Housing capital expenditure funded from capital receipts cannot, therefore, be separately identified.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, for each London borough, the present accrued total of capital receipts.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the information placed in the Library of the House of 9 March 1988 in reply to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier).

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures in the Official Report indicating, for each London borough, the amount gained in capital receipts from (a) right to buy, (b) other house sales and (c) other sales, for each year since 1980-81.

Mrs. Roe: Information on housing capital receipts in 1985-86, 1986-87 and the first three quarters of 1987-88 is given in the table: corresponding figures for earlier years are not readily available. Receipts from right-to-buy sales are not reported separately from other dwellings.

Council House Sales

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures for each London borough for (a) the average selling price of council dwellings under (i) right to buy and (ii) other sales and (b) the average percentage discount on the sale of council dwellings under (1) right to buy and (2) other sales.

Mrs. Roe: Information on selling prices and discounts is not available separately for right-to-buy and other sales. The figures in the table have been derived from those quarterly returns for 1987-88 so far received from the boroughs.

King's Cross Goods Yard

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to establishing a development corporation or trust to oversee the development of King's Cross goods yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 April 1988]: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the normal mechanism of the planning system is the proper way to resolve the future of this site. However, in view of the scale and importance of the proposals, he wishes to have an opportunity to consider whether any major application for the site should be called-in for his decision. He has therefore made a direction requiring Camden council to consult him before any planning application of over 100,000 sq ft is decided.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has met with either of the consortia proposing to develop the King's Cross goods yard.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 April 1988]: My right hon. Friend has not discussed the proposals with either of the consortia.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his written reply to the hon. Member for Clydesdale, 17 February, Official Report, column 663, he will now publish the proposals for the protection of the environment and the quality of life of communities affected by opencast mining and other similar activities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many representations were received about the revised draft planning guidelines for opencast coal mining issued for consultation in April 1987.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Revised guidelines on planning control over opencast coal mining will be issued shortly. These will aim to help mineral planning authorities ensure that the right balance is struck between environmental considerations and economic benefits when planning applications for opencast working are considered. Sixty letters of representation were received in response to the consultation document.

Hampstead Heath

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a decision on the future of Hampstead heath; if he will take into account the views expressed by the Association of London Authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Any representations made by the Association of London Authorities or any other organisation or individual will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend in reaching his decision on the future of Hampstead heath. I expect the decision to be taken in good time for an orderly transfer of responsibility with effect from 1 April 1989.

Lime Dust (Cheriton)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of lime dust released into the atmosphere in the Cheriton region of Folkestone; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the circumstances which led to the problems caused by lime spraying by the Eurotunnel consortium and its subsequent effects on the residents of Cheriton, Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe [holding answers 19 and 21 April 1988]: My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone (Mr. Howard) drew this incident to the Department's attention immediately on 6 April. Shepway district council contacted Eurotunnel, which is responsible for the work and the operation was suspended while the adverse weather conditions prevailed. This particular phase of the work was completed without a further recurrence of the problem.

Shepway district council has served a notice on Eurotunnel under the Public Health (Recurring Nuisances) Act 1961 to prevent similar incidents from occurring. In future the contractor will use lime granules, which are much less prone to wind disturbance.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor the construction works being carried out by the Eurotunnel consortium works, particularly in respect of dust levels in the Cheriton area of Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) today. As required by the terms of the concession, an independent body, Maitre D'Oeuvre, has been appointed to monitor the design of the works and the detailed operation of the contract on behalf of the IGC. In addition, a joint consultative committee has been set up under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport, with representatives of Government Departments, local authorities in Kent, Eurotunnel and British Rail to consider any matters of concern to Kent in relation to the Channel tunnel project.

Palace of Westminster (Toilets)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to ensure that male toilets in the Palace of Westminster are labelled as such.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 April 1988]: If the hon. Member has been experiencing any particular difficulties in identifying such toilets, I shall be happy to provide him with details of their location.

European Environment Year

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the achievements sponsored by Her Majesty's Government to date, in support of the European Year of the Environment; and if he will make a statement on the major initiatives known to his Department achieved by other European countries participant in the European environment year.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to the reply, 16 February 1988, c. 525-26]. I am today placing in the Library and the Vote Office "Protecting Your Environment—A Guide"—the general guide to environmental protection.

We are making this guide widely available to environment groups, schools and members of the public.

Playgrounds

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions are given to local authorities about the design of playgrounds to ensure that children are properly protected from injury; and if he will be making proposals to ensure that adequate safeguards are available.

Mr. Moynihan: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 imposes a general duty on local authorities to take resonable measures to ensure the safety of all non-domestic premises, including playgrounds, which are under their control. Duties under this Act are enforceable by the Health and Safety Executive to whom all serious injuries occurring in playgrounds must be reported. The Department issued guidance to local authorities on safety in children's playgrounds in 1978. This guidance was consolidated in British Standard 5696 and a new British standard on playground safety is currently being drawn up. In addition, the National Playing Fields Association provides an independent advice service on playground safety for local authorities and other playground operators.

DEFENCE

Skyguard Radar

17. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the trials of Skyguard radar equipment to monitor low-flying military aircraft movements.

Mr. Freeman: Field trials of the Skyguard radar system as an aid for monitoring low-flying military aircraft movements were carried out in July 1987, during Exercise OSEX 14, and March 1988, during Exercise Mallet Blow 88/1. Analysis of the results is still continuing.

AWRE Aldermaston

18. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to improve the security arrangements at AWRE Aldermaston.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. Improvements are planned to the boundary fence.

Service Personnel (House Purchase)

19. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what incentives his Department offers to service men to purchase their own homes.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence is very much aware of the desirability of encouraging service men to purchase their own homes, subject to the Services' operational needs. Details of the current arrangements are given in the pamphlet "Housing: a Guide to Servicemen and Servicewomen", a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Chemical Weapons

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to discuss chemical weapons with the other Defence Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with his NATO colleagues to discuss a wide range of defence and security issues.

39. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the Alliance's chemical warfare capability.

64. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the Alliance's chemical warfare capacity.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with his NATO colleagues concerning our common objective of the achievement of a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on chemical weapons. There are no chemical weapons declared to NATO.

A90 Building

21. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest assessment of the degree of slippage in the programme for the A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest assessment of the degree of slippage in the programme for the A90 building at AWRE Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: As the Comptroller and Auditor General's report published last June stated, there has been slippage in the A90 building programme at AWRE Aldermaston and our assessment is that this building will now come into full operation in early 1992.

Trident

22. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on the Trident programme for every year since its inception.

Mr. Sainsbury: The expenditure each year since beginning of the United Kingdom Trident programme is as follows:

Financial Year	Current (outturn) prices £ million
1981-82	31
1982-83	71
1983-84	95
1984-85	165
1985-86	268
1986-87	377

35. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the increase in the cost of the pressurised water reactor for the Trident submarine; and what are the implications for the total cost of the Trident project.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

55. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the latest estimate of the cost of Trident in relation to the original estimate.

Mr. Younger: One representation, in the form of a letter from a member of the public, has been received since I announced the revised Trident estimate in January this year.

Cruise Missiles

23. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Ministers about the possible deployment of further sea-launched cruise missiles.

52. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with other NATO Ministers about the possible deployment of further sea-launched cruise missiles.

53. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with his European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts about the modernisation of battlefield nuclear weapons in central Europe.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 23 February 1988 at column 165.

Defence Commitments

24. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next anticipates a major review of Britain's defence commitments.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We have no plans for any review of our defence commitments beyond the annual appraisal made in connection with the public expenditure survey.

Nuclear Submarines

25. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to announce his Department's plans for (i) decommission and (ii) disposal of obsolete nuclear submarines.

30. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to announce his Department's plans for (i) decommission and (ii) disposal of obsolete nuclear submarines.

71. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to announce his Department's plans for (a) decommissioning and (b) disposal of obsolete nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is intended that all Royal Navy nuclear submarines will be defuelled at the end of their operational lives in the same way as Dreadnought has been. No decision has yet been taken on the method of disposal for defuelled nuclear submarines.

West Germany (Low Flying)

26. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of low flights over the Federal Republic of Germany is accounted for by the Royal Air Force.

29. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of low flights over the Federal Republic of Germany is accounted for by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: During 1987 the RAF flew approximately 16,000 low-level sorties over the Federal Republic of Germany. Other low-flying activity in the Federal Republic is a matter for their Government.

Long-range Missiles

27. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with progress on the Trigat programme in view of recent developments in armour capability.

Mr. Younger: Yes, I am pleased to announce that I have now signed the memorandum of understanding indicating formally United Kingdom participation with France and Germany in the collaborative full development of both medium and long range Trigat weapons. Contracts with industry for this development work are currently being finalised. Trigat will be developed to meet the threat in the mid-1990s and beyond.

Cyprus

28. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to visit Cyprus.

Mr. Younger: I have no plans to do so at present. I visited the sovereign base areas in Cyprus in April last year.

Anglo-French Co-operation

31. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a further statement about Anglo-French defence co-operation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 22 March at column 114.

72. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to hold one of his regular meetings with his French counterpart to discuss defence matters of common interest.

Mr. Younger: I last met M. Giraud at the WEU meeting on 18-19 April when a wide range of matters of mutual interest was discussed. I have no immediate plans for a further meeting.

Defence Contracts

32. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to assess the effectiveness of his Department's implementation of the recommendations contained in the report, "Learning from Experience", in relation to overspending on defence contracts.

37. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to assess the effectiveness of his Department's implementation of the recommendations contained in the report, "Learning from Experience", in relation to overspending on defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report "Learning from Experience" acknowledged the many improvements that have already been made in procurement procedures in recent years. Implementation of recommendations from the report is under way and progress will be kept under continual review.

57. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the initiative to publicise defence contract opportunities in France and the United States of America in order to encourage mutual purchases of equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Discussions with the French have led to the publication of a French contracts bulletin similar to that in the UK. The US Government also publish their own contract opportunities, and local US requirements are publicised from time to time in the British contracts bulletin. In addition, Anglo-French equipment conferences are held to discuss forthcoming requirements.

Listed Buildings

33. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the care and ultimate disposal of surplus listed buildings in the defence estate.

Mr. Freeman: The Property Services Agency is responsible, on behalf of the Ministry of Defence, for the maintenance of the majority of historic listed buildings on the Defence Estate. It is its duty to ensure that such buildings are properly protected, even if surplus to requirements and awaiting disposal. The Ministry of Defence and Property Services Agency follow the Department of the Environment's guidelines which stipulate that disused historic buildings should continue to receive regular inspections and a normal standard of maintenance in order to keep the property fit for further use, or to maintain its disposal value. Such buildings can, however, create special problems and they may be difficult to sell. Despite this, every effort is made to keep them in a fit state and the MOD has recently established a historic military buildings committee, with expert outside representatives, to advise on ways in which such properties can best be preserved or disposed of in the most sympathetic manner.

Frigates

34. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of current contracts to build frigates; and how many jobs are involved.

38. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of current contracts to build frigates; and how many jobs are involved.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today.

Firing Ranges

36. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many small arms and rifle ranges his Department has responsibility for in the United Kingdom; and how many of these are electronic.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence is responsible for a total of 2,020 small arms and open ranges. Of these 45 are equipped with electric targets. In addition, a number of firing positions on field firing ranges are capable of accepting electric targets on a temporary basis when training requires.

United States Forces

40. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made for the deployment of additional United States strike aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made for the deployment of additional United States strike aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The level and composition of United States forces based in the United Kingdom is the subject of regular exchanges between the British and United States Governments at both ministerial and official levels. Details of these exchanges are classified.

Training Land

41. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the type, amount and geographical position of additional training land needed by his Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet on 22 March, Official Report, columns 110-11.

Mr. Freeman: The principal need is for land for "dry" training, that is training without the use of live ammunition. It is Ministry of Defence policy to seek to acquire such land in any suitable area but preferably where this will allow us to extend existing training areas if and when adjoining land becomes available for purchase.

Environmental Protection

42. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the protection of the environment on lands owned or used by his Department.

65. Mr. Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the protection of the environment on lands owned or used by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence regards conservation and the protection of the environment as integral parts of both the management and use of its estate. Since 1973 the Ministry has appointed a conservation officer to promote and co-ordinate conservation activity throughout the estate and most MOD establishments are covered by a conservation group which typically includes representatives of local communities, environmental bodies and conservation specialists. The Ministry works closely with the Nature Conservancy Council — particularly in relation to the 176 sites of special scientific interest on the estate—and has recently signed a joint declaration with the NCC on the approach to be adopted to conservation on defence land.

AWACS

43. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest value of offset contracts created in relation to the AWACS contract with Boeing.

Mr. Younger: The value of contracts claimed by Boeing in its first report is in the region of $140 million. This report is currently being evaluated.

Defence Resources

44. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards shifting defence resources from support areas to the front line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Substantial progress has been made in transferring resources from the support area to the front line since we came into office in 1979. The Royal Navy has pared back its support area so that some 70 per cent. of its uniformed manpower is now devoted to the front line and personnel spend more time at sea; the army is saving some 4,000 posts in the support area to facilitate enhancement of the front line, including the formation of two new front line regiments with no addition to total manpower; since 1984 the RAF has released 1,700 posts from the support area in the fields of catering, aircraft servicing and supply. Civilian manpower in the Ministry of Defence has declined by some 40 per cent. since 1979. We shall continue to improve value for money in defence spending.

Irish Defence Minister

45. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Irish Defence Minister.

Mr. Younger: I have never met the Irish Minister for Defence.

Aerosols

46. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols within the buildings of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

73. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols in his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no such plans.

Defence Establishments (Visits)

47. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy toward promoting visits by Members of Parliament to defence establishments at home and abroad.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome the interest which has been shown by hon. and right hon. Members in visiting defence establishments. Opportunities exist for hon. and right hon. Members to undertake such visits as part of all-party parliamentary groups, whose planned visits are periodically drawn to their attention.

Hon. and right hon. Members are also encouraged to visit defence establishments within their own constituency by prior arrangement with the armed forces units concerned.

Tucano Jet Trainer

48. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made towards Controller Aircraft release of the Tucano jet trainer aircraft for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: An initial controller aircraft release is expected to be issued very soon.

Defence Expenditure

49. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the growth in expenditure on (a) conventional defence and (b) nuclear defence since May 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since 1978-79, in real terms about £21·5 billion more has been spent on defence (of which about £2·5 billion has been on strategic nuclear defence) than would have been the case if expenditure had continued at the 1978-79 level. (Figures are cumulative to the end of 1987-88 and are at constant 1987-88 prices.)

Reserve Forces

50. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department proposes to take to give greater national publicity to the role of the reserve forces.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to the regular cycle of recruiting compaigns which bring the role of the reserve forces to the attention of the public, this year will see a major innovation in the form of the publicity campaign recommended by the national employer liaison committee, the funding for which was recently announced in the House. The precise details of this campaign have yet to be finalised but its central theme will be the promotion of general public awareness of the reserve forces by means of stressing the advantages of membership to both the individual and employers and by clearly setting out the vital role occupied by these volunteer forces.

70. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress made in expanding the volunteer reserves.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1979, when expansion measures were first set in hand by the Government, the combined strength of the volunteer reserves, not including the Ulster Defence regiment, has increased by about 32 per cent. to some 87,500. Since 1979 the strength of the TA has increased by some 15,900, with a further 3,200 for the Territorial Army's Home Service Force. During a similar period the combined strength of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve has risen by some 1,320, and the Royal Marines Reserve by about 520. Finally, since the decision to expand the Royal Naval Reserve in 1984 the strength of that reserve has risen by over 400.

Trust Fund

51. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the establishment of a trust fund to assist ex-members of the forces who cannot either sue for damages or receive ex-gratia payments in respect of injuries by the date on which such injuries occurred.

Mr. Freeman: A number of representations have been received from the right hon. Gentleman and others.

Royal Dockyards

54. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the progress of commercial management of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the speech I made in the Navy debate on 3 March 1988.

Franco-German Brigade

56. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the proposed new Franco-German brigade for Her Majesty's Government's defence posture, with particular reference to the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

63. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the proposed new Franco-German brigade for Her Majesty's Government's defence posture, with particular reference to the United Kingdom's contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The formation of a joint brigade, as announced at the Franco-German summit on 22 January, has no foreseeable implications for United Kingdom defence policy or our contribution to NATO.

Service Hospitals (NHS Patients)

58. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps his Department has taken to ensure that the maximum possible number of civilian National Health Service patients are admitted to service hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: My hon. Friend, is, I am sure, referring to the national financial arrangement between the MOD and DHSS which I announced in my answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) on 30 March 1988 at column 465. The Ministry of Defence will continue to treat NHS patients up to a baseline, which broadly equates to the defence training requirement, as a charge to the defence votes. Any spare capacity above that baseline will be offered to health authorities, on a marginal cost basis, to relieve their waiting lists and maximise the number of NHS patients treated in service hospitals. The MOD and DHSS are actively developing a plan of implementation to ensure that the health authorities and general practitioners are aware of what facilities the service hospitals have to offer. Progress in implementing these new arrangements at local level will be monitored by both Departments.

Warsaw Pact Defence Posture

59. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account recent and proposed NATO military exercises have taken of changes in Warsaw pact defence posture.

61. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account recent and proposed NATO military exercises have taken of changes in Warsaw pact defence posture.

Mr. Ian Stewart: NATO military exercises are planned with due regard to the currently perceived threat. Details of the scenarios are, however, classified.

Lance Missile

60. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the time scale for deploying a follow-on to the Lance missile under the Montebello decision.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the time scale for deploying a follow-on to the Lance missile under the Montebello decision.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo).

Montebello Agreement

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the time scale for deploying new nuclear artillery shells under the Montebello decision.

Mr. Younger: The agreement at Montebello in 1983 did not include specific decisions on such matters. Detailed proposals for implementing the Montebello agreement were submitted to Ministers by SACEUR in 1985 and continue to be pursued with the individual nations concerned. The time scale for the introduction of new artillery rounds will vary in practice from country to country. The United States has, I understand, already deployed some improved artillery shells, designated W79, with its forces in the Federal Republic of Germany but no decisions on modernisation as it affects British forces have yet been taken.

62. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the time scale for deploying new nuclear artillery shells under the Montebello decision.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis).

SDI Programme

66. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the strategic defence initiative programme.

74. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the strategic defence initiative programme.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: None recently, but there have been several ministerial and senior official contacts with the United States Department of Defence in recent months on various aspects of the SDI programme.

NATO

67. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last met Lord Carrington at the meeting of the defence planning committee in December 1987, when a wide range of issues of mutual interest was discussed.

Disarmament (Stockholm Conference)

68. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the working of the procedures agreed at the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes. The provisions of the Stockholm agreement for notification and observation of exercises have in general worked well. There were eight observable Warsaw Pact exercises in 1987 and there have been two to date in 1988; nine NATO exercises in 1987, of which two were United Kingdom exercises, and one so far this year; and Finland has just become the first neutral and non-aligned country to host observers. The United Kingdom sent observers to all the relevant exercises.

The inspection procedures, which are designed to clarify any doubts about compliance with the provisions of the agreement and are a significant way of achieving greater confidence on all sides, have also been successfully implemented. Inspections have been carried out by the USSR on three NATO exercises; by the GDR on one NATO exercise; by the United States of America on three Warsaw Pact exercises;, and by the United Kingdom on two Warsaw Pact exercises. No evidence of non-compliance with the Stockholm agreement has been found.

Defence Expenditure

69. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proportion of quantifiable defence spending in Wales.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Defence expenditure is not accounted for on a regional basis. However, so far as procurement expenditure is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 18 April at column 334.

Departmental Facilities (Relocation)

75. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on planning the relocation of Ministry of Defence facilities with regard to local levels of unemployment.

Mr. Sainsbury: In considering proposals for relocation of defence work unemployment levels are among the factors taken into account and, of course, any move would have to be justifiable in both operational and economic terms.

Deep Space Tracking Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which unit of the United States Air Force the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell will be assigned; what is the estimated cost for the construction of this facility; what is the source of funding for this construction; what is the proposed date of commencement of construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The deep space satellite tracking facility which the USAF plan to construct at RAF Feltwell will be under the command of USAF Space Command. It is estimated that the construction of this facility will cost about US$ 17 million and this will be funded by the USAF. Subject to planning approvals it is hoped to begin construction work in the summer of this year.

Air-to-Surface Missiles

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the time scale for deploying new tactical air-to-surface missiles under the Montebello decision.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo).

Mr. J. L. Imrie

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any financial assistance or advice has been given by his Department to Mr. J. L. Imrie, in respect of recent instructions given by Mr. Imrie to Kingsley Napley Solicitors.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. Mr. Imrie's legal costs are being met by those who made allegations against him without the protection of parliamentary privilege.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average duration of a fast jet low-level sortie over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The average duration of a fast jet low-level sortie over the United Kingdom is approximately 42 minutes.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any restrictions have been placed on the export of protection and decontamination equipment for use in response to chemical and biological weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: All protection and decontamination equipment for use in response to chemical and biological weapons is subject to export licence under group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987. Each of these exports is carefully considered on a case by case basis.

Statement on the Defence Estimates

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 will be published.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 25 April.

Japanese Prisoners of War

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from bodies representing prisoners of war in Japan during the second world war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None, although we have recently received approaches on behalf of ex-prisoners of war held elsewhere in the far east.

Professors and Lecturers (Pay and Expenses)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the rates of pay and expenses paid by the Army for lectures and other short courses of instruction by visiting professors and lecturers.

Mr. Freeman: The following rates of pay, effective from 1 March 1988, are paid by MOD to visiting civilian lecturers. The rates are set centrally by Her Majesty's Treasury and apply to all Government Departments.

	Part day session £	Full day session £
a. For academic lecturers
Professor	80-162	160-216
Senior lecturer	63-117	125-155
Lecturer	36-100	71-133
b. Status equivalent to:
Professor	85-208	167-271
Senior lecturer	71-144	157-198
Lecturer	37-119	74-157

Although minor incidental expenses are covered in the fee, more substantial expenses that are unavoidably incurred, notably travel or subsistence costs, may be reimbursed in addition to the fee.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future division of defence costs between the Hong Kong and United Kingdom Governments.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Discussions are continuing between the British and Hong Kong Governments on the details of arrangements for sharing future defence costs in Hong Kong.

Horseshoe Barracks, Shoeburyness

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the Horseshoe barracks at Shoeburyness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 18 April on this matter, and I shall be meeting him shortly to discuss future plans for the site.

Written Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Botswana

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has made to, or received from, the Botswana Government in respect of the raid by South African security forces into Botswana on 28 March.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the raid, the Botswana high commissioner in London called on me.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government following the raid by South African security forces into Botswana on 28 March.

Mrs. Chalker: We issued a statement on 28 March condemning the raid. I asked the South African ambassador to call on 29 March and delivered our very strong protest. On 31 March the German ambassador in Cape Town gave a similar message to the South African Government on behalf of the 12 member states of the European Community.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of South Africa's policy towards Botswana.

Mrs. Chalker: We have condemned South Africa's use of force in its relations with Botswana and its other neighbours. We shall continue to urge the South Africans to exercise restraint and to co-operate peacefully with their neighbours.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to, or received representations from, the African National Congress with regard to the African National Congress's use of Botswana as a route into South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: No. But we have made clear on many occasions our opposition to cross-border incursions from whatever quarter.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the African National Congress use of Botswana as a route into South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have repeatedly condemned cross-border incursions in either direction. Our opposition to the use of violence by the African National Congress is well known to it, as well as to others.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy towards the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the African National Congress's use of Botswana as a route into South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Cross-border incursions from whatever quarter threaten stability in the region.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he proposes to take to strengthen the United Kingdom's relationship with Botswana.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom already enjoys a close and cordial relationship with Botswana. We consult regularly about the situation in the region.

Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the recent meeting of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Ministers and Heads of State, on 2 to 3 March, any consideration was given to the issues planned for discussion at the United Nations special session on disarmament, to be held in New York from 31 May to 25 June in terms of their relevance to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's collective security strategy and agreed disarmament goals.

Mr. Mellor: The UNSSD was not specifically discussed at the meeting of NATO Heads of Government in March, but the Alliance keeps its security and arms control objectives under constant consideration, and allies have discussed their approach to UNSSD at official level within NATO.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report, a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 25 April.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Luxembourg on 25 and 26 April. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs was present on 25 April. I attended on 26 April.

The Council further reviewed the implementation of the conclusions of the European Council in Brussels in February.

Possible dates for the 1989 European Parliament elections were discussed, and the question was remitted for further consideration at the May Foreign Affairs Council.

The Council discussed progress in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, and examined prospects for the negotiations during 1988. The Council also reviewed, and reached conclusions on, relations between the Community and Japan; a copy of the conclusions is being placed in the Library of the House.

Commission proposals on guidelines for the EC's programme of aid to Asia and Latin America were discussed, and the presidency declared them adopted. The Council also met a European Parliament delegation to discuss the extension of the food aid framework regulation, which expires at the end of June: the presidency will pursue the matter further with the Parliament, and will report back to a future Council.

Though over dinner there was a discussion of political issues with Turkish Ministers, the planned Association

Council with Turkey did not, to Her Majesty's Government's great regret, take place. We attach importance to building up the Community's relationship with Turkey on the basis of the association agreement: and hope that this temporary set back will soon be overcome.

In the framework of European political co-operation, my right hon. and learned Friend raised the Kuwaiti Airlines hijacking and its aftermath, and put forward proposals for action to tighten international protection against hijacking. It was agreed that an expert group should meet soon to consider these proposals and other aspects of the hijacking.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Care

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether, in the arrangements for disclosure of information about those seeking to work with children, any restriction will be placed on the type of information that the police will be allowed to pass on to employers about those seeking to work with children other than past convictions, cautions and bindovers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether, in relation to the arrangements for the disclosure of information about those seeking to work with children, it will be permissible for the police to pass on to employers information concerning unproved allegations about those seeking to work with children which they consider relevant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the arrangements for the disclosure of information from police records to local authorities and other bodies, the police may disclose any relevant information which might give cause for concern about a candidate's suitability to work with children. Where this information does not agree with that disclosed by the candidate, the employing organisation must take the matter up with the individual before reaching a decision on whether to appoint the person to the post in question.

Gaming

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received as to the rules and money limits for amusement with prizes in public houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None recently. The maximum amounts of the prizes which may be paid out for winning on amusement-with-prizes machines, in public houses as elsewhere, were increased on 1 January 1987. We have no current plan for any further change in the maxima, or for any amendment of the provision of the Gaming Act 1968 that premises licensed for the sale of alcohol for consumption on the premises in which such machines are installed require a permit from the licensing Justices.

Remand Centres and Open Prisons

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether applications are to be invited for the contracting of management of private urban remand centres and open prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 15 April at column 258 about the fourth report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs on contract provision of prisons.

New Prison (March)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates the new prison at March, Cambridgeshire, will be completed; what will be its final cost; what will be the number and type of inmates it will take; what will be the number of full-time prison warder staff, and the number of ancillary staff required; what will be the estimated total wage bill for the prison for all employees; and what is the starting date for recruitment of staff.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The new category B prison at March — to be known as Her Majesty's prison, Whitemoor — is expected to open in mid-1991 at a forecast capital cost of £34·9 million at current prices. The prison is designed for 522 inmates. It is estimated that 225 prison officer class and 70 locally recruited ancillary staff will be required to man the establishment at a total estimated annual salary cost of about £5 million at projected 1991 prices. The prison will be manned by serving and newly appointed officers, who will start to be posted in about the six-months period before the arrival of the first inmates; account has already been taken in forward plans of the need for the additional staff.

Firearms

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many cases of criminal or other misuse of semi-automatic rifles have been reported since the Hungerford tragedy in August 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 30 November 1987 at column 392. It is planned to publish in June 1988 the summary statistics for 1987 of offences recorded by the police in which firearms were used.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the introduction of a scheme to compensate owners of buy-in weapons that would become unsaleable by virtue of the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords].

Mr. John Patten: A few representations have raised the question of compensation. Decisions have not yet been reached on which weapons it will become an offence to manufacture, sell and import; simple possession will not become an offence.

Petrol Stations (Alcohol Sales)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those petrol stations which are also licensed for the retail sale of alcoholic drinks are located in (a) urban areas and (b) rural areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department has not had cause recently to seek detailed information about the location of licensed garages. Such information as is available relates to the number of garages — petrol stations with off-licences as at 30 June 1986 by petty sessional division. This is given in the table:

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has concerning the percentage of total profit generated on average by the retail sales of alcoholic drinks by those petrol stations which are also licensed for such sales;

(2) whether he has any information concerning the percentage of customers using the shops at those petrol stations licensed for the retail sale of alcohol who also buy petrol.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no such information.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the provision in the Licensing Bill which would remove the licence for the retail sale of alcohol from petrol stations in rural areas which hold such licences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the clause relating to garages was added to the Licensing Bill, seven letters have been received of which all but one have opposed the amendment.

Weapons

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the number and location of publicly owned collections of edged, pointed, concussive and other weapons;

(2) what studies his Department has conducted into the effect of provisions of the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords] regarding edged, pointed, concussive and other weapons on auction houses auctioning weapons which are antique or collectors' items;

(3) if his Department had made any estimate of the number of registered traders dealing in edged, pointed, concussive and other weapons which are either antique or regarded as works of artistic or technical merit.

Mr. John Patten: Our consultations with outside interests on a first draft list of weapons which it will become an offence under the Criminal Justice Bill to manufacture, sell and import have prompted helpful responses from museums, auctioneers, dealers and others on the possible consequences of the proposals for them. These will assist us in reaching decisions on the final composition of the list.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report and recommendations of the advisory committee considering whether anabolic steroids should be made controlled drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs will consider this question when it meets on 12 May. We expect to receive its recommendations shortly thereafter.

PRIME MINISTER

Sterling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to seek to improve co-ordination between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other interested Ministers in relation to Government policy on the level of sterling; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans for change.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the allocation of ministerial responsibility for the management of the sterling exchange rate.

The Prime Minister: Economic policy is that of the Government. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is the lead Minister.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

County Courts

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list in the Official Report the general public statutes and law reports made available to county court judges.

The Attorney-General: On appointment, all circuit judges are invited to select one of the following to be provided for their personal use: "All England Law Reports", "Weekly Law Reports", "Criminal Appeal Reports", "Family Law Reports". Copies of public general Acts are supplied to judges on request.

"Halsbury's Laws of England" and "Halsbury's Statutes" are available to principal county courts, together with the "All England Law Reports", the "Weekly Law Reports" and the "Law Reports". Either the "All England Law Reports" or the "Weekly Law Reports" are available to smaller county courts provided that sittings are sufficiently frequent.

ENVIRONMENT

Canary Wharf

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many buildings Canary wharf will consist of; and how many square feet of space each will have;

(2) what are the heights proposed for the major buildings envisaged at Canary wharf.

Mr. Trippier: There will be about 26 buildings of varying sizes totalling 12·2 million sq ft. The main tower will be about 800 ft high and the approved height of the other two towers is up to 690 ft.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of the new jobs in docklands has gone to residents in the three docklands boroughs since 1981;

(2) what percentage of employment in docklands is in firms which were in existence before 1981.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of employment in docklands is female.

Mr. Trippier: About 32 per cent.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs there are in the offices of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: About 281 — including permanent officers, fixed-term contract staff and consultancy and agency appointees.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the houses built on land taken by the London Docklands development corporation from borough councils or the Greater London council is public housing for rent.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

St. Katharine's Dock

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs there are at St. Katharine's Dock.

Mr. Trippier: About 2,600.

Water Byelaws

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the date for the implementation of the proposals first published in March 1983, under the title "Report of the Standing Technical Committee on Water Regulations on its proposals for a New Model Water Byelaws", subsequently confirmed as the model in June 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall make an announcement as soon as I have given full consideration to representations received following public advertisement last year of the new byelaws made by water undertakers.

Thorpe Hall, Peterborough

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost to date of building the dry stone wall around Thorpe hall in Peterborough; and what is his estimate of the final total cost of the project.

Mr. Moynihan: The building of the dry stone wall around Thorpe hall, Peterborough is funded by the city council as part of its community programme, with the Manpower Services Commission. No grant aid for the wall has been given by English Heritage or by the Department. Inquiries on the cost of the project should therefore be made to Peterborough city council.

Wychwood Forest

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the order made by Oxfordshire county council to create a public footpath through Wychwood forest; when he expects a public inquiry to be held to consider the objections; and when he expects the decision on the order to be issued.

Mr. Moynihan: The Secretary of State for the Environment received the order on 2 June 1987. Subject to confirmation by Oxfordshire county council the inquiry will be held on 19 July. A decision will then be issued as soon as possible.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department has for advertising in connection with the introduction of the community charge; and what will be the estimated cost of such advertising.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has as yet made no decisions on the public's need for information in relation to new rights and duties when the Local Government Finance Bill receives Royal Assent.

Supply Estimates (Hostels)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will define the term hostel as used in class IX, vote 1, A2.1(b) of the Supply Estimates.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The term "Hostels" as used in connection with expenditure under class IX, vote 1, A2.1(b) is defined in section 106(i) of the Housing Associations Act 1985. Grant is paid under section 55 of that Act to hostels managed by housing associations registered with the Housing Corporation.

Homeless Housing Units

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councils are the subject of special investigation into possible overspending by homeless housing units; and what proposals he has for preventing overspending by those providing bed and breakfast accommodation for local authorities.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Such investigations are the responsibility of local auditors and the Audit Commission.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Botswana

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to assist the Botswana Government to strengthen their national economy and decrease their dependence on the South African economy.

Mr. Chris Patten: All our bilateral aid to Botswana aims to strengthen the national economy. In addition we support the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which Botswana is a member.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom contributions to Botswana through national, Commonwealth and European Community action in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Kingdom bilateral aid and the estimated British share of Commonwealth and European Community aid to Botswana since 1983 have been as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
United Kingdom bilateral aid (1)	13,289	15,975	8,775	12,805
Estimated United Kingdom share of European Community aid	330	1,180	500	1,120
Estimated United Kingdom share of Commonwealth aid (2)	108	83	113	147

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.
(1) These figures include expenditure by the Commonwealth Development Corporation of: 3,332 6,570 2,700 6,027
(2) Figures cover the period July-June.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current development projects in Botswana for which United Kingdom national, Commonwealth or European assistance is given; what is the value of that assistance; and if he will specify the means or agencies through which assistance is given.

Mr. Chris Patten: The British bilateral aid programme to Botswana is currently funding with grants a range of technical co-operation activities including the provision of expert personnel, training for Botswana in the United Kingdom and consultancies. We expect to spend about £5·5 million in 1988-89. This is a Government-to-Government programme.

The Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation is currently funding with grants estimated at £490,000 a number of projects in Botswana involving the provision of experts.

Projects in Botswana currently being financed by the European Community from the fifth and sixth European development funds as part of the Lomé conventions are as follows:

	Total cost of project (£ million)
Grant Funding
Sheep and goat development (phase 2)	1·12
Services to livestock owners (phase 2)	1·80

The United Kingdom share of the EDF grants, special loans and risk capital projects totalling £22·52 million is £3·7 million.

International Children's Emergency Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing per capita contributions to United Nations international children's emergency fund, for the latest year for which figures are available, for each member of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, in ranked order.

Mr. Chris Patten: Preliminary 1987 contributions per capita (including both general fund and special appeals) are as follows:

Rank	Donor	$/head
1	Sweden	9·41
2	Norway	9·39
3	Finland	4·64

Note: Population figures for 1986 have been used as 1987 figures are not yet available.

International Organisations (Government Contributions)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing in constant 1987 pounds sterling contributions by Her Majesty's Government for each year since 1974 to the United Nations international children's emergency fund the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation and the World Health Organisation.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	UNICEF £ million[1]	UNESCO £ million[1]	WHO £ million[1]
1974	5·0	na	[2] 9·6
1975	10·7	[2]6·0	[2] 9·1

[1] Constant (1987) prices.
[2] Partly estimated.
[3] Special increase to mark international Year of the Child.
[4] Figures for 1987 are provisional.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government expect to achieve the United Nations' target of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product for overseas aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: Like previous Administrations, the Government have not set a date for achieving the 0·7 per cent. target. Progress towards the target depends on developments in the economy and other claims on resources. We have a substantial aid programme and one that is now growing in real terms.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the percentage increase in teachers' pay for each year since 1974.

Mrs. Rumbold: The pay increases received by teachers in England and Wales from 1 April 1974 to 1 April 1986 are listed in chapter 3 of the Government's consultative document, "Teachers' Pay and Conditions" Cmnd. 238, copies of which are in the Library. In 1987 teachers in England and Wales received a pay increase of 16·4 per cent. in two equal instalments from 1 January and 1 October 1987.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Furs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will state the principal countries of origin of the lynx furs offered for sale annually in the United Kingdom as finished garments; and if he will estimate for each country the number of garments involved;

(2) if he will state the principal countries of origin of the red fox furs offered for sale annually in the United Kingdom as finished garments; and if he will estimate for each country the number of garments involved.

Mr. Atkins: The items referred to are not identified separately in the Overseas Trade Statistics.

Hairdressing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what other European Community members have statutory controls on the hairdressing industry; and what are the natures of such controls in each country.

Mr. Atkins: I am making inquiries and will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

Accounts (Prosecutions)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of prosecutions for failure to file (a) accounts and (b) annual returns have been successful in each year since 1978.

Mr. Maude: Following is the information.

	Prosecutions initiated		Number not proceeded with[1]		Number heard at court		Convictions		Convictions as a percentage of numbers heard at court

[1] Includes cases where summonses could not be served or were withdrawn but excludes those adjourned "sine die" which are not shown in the table.

Safety of Goods

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultative procedures are followed when taking action under section 11(5) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987; and if he will publish any guidelines on how businesses likely to be affected by proposed regulations are consulted.

Mr. Butcher: About 80 organisations are consulted on safety regulations covering consumer products. These include chambers of commerce, the associations representing wholesalers, retailers, importers, manufacturers, independent businesses and mail order houses as well as local authorities, enforcement bodies, consumer groups, the British Standards Institution and the Health and Safety Commission. Copies of draft regulations are deposited in the House of Commons and House of Lords Libraries. To this general list are added trade associations and other organisations representing those directly concerned with the particular regulations. I am confident that all reasonable steps are taken to consult all those with an interest and I do not consider it necessary to issue any further guidelines.

Voluntary Restraint Agreements

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are taken by his Department to monitor the burden on business of voluntary agreements.

Mr. Alan Clark: Voluntary restraint arrangements do not impose any special administrative or legal burdens on United Kingdom business but have an economic impact. In looking at the net effect of such arrangements on the United Kingdom economy as a whole, my Department examines the effect on the industry concerned as well as that on industrial and other users.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Darlington on 30 March, Official Report, column 478, he will list the nature of each voluntary restraint agreement to which he refers.

Mr. Alan Clark: As indicated in my written answer of 30 March, at column 478-79, the majority of the voluntary restraint agreements are negotiated between the United Kingdom industry and its counterpart overseas. The agreements negotiated by the European Commission on steel and textiles (and those with Japan which were brought to an end in 1985) were entered into on behalf of the Community as a whole. The Commission does negotiate restraints on footwear with certain eastern European countries on behalf of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent the United Kingdom has been party to discussions on inter-industry voluntary restraint agreements within the framework of the general agreement on tariffs and trade round negotiations; and what conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community was party to the agreement reached by Ministers of the contracting parties to the general agreement on tariffs and trade (GATT) in September 1986 that all trade restrictive or distorting measures inconsistent with GATT should be phased out or brought into conformity with GATT by the date of the formal completion of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations. There have been no substantive discussions to date on the relationship to GATT of industry-to-industry voluntary restraint agreements.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list those restraint agreements on steel applicable to the United Kingdom, giving the date of commencement and extent of each such agreement.

Mr. Alan Clark: As part of the Community's external regime on steel, the European Commission negotiates restraint arrangements on behalf of all member states of the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC). There are currently agreements with the following major suppliers.

Country	Year commenced
Austria	1978
Finland	1978
Norway	1978
Sweden	1978
Bulgaria	1979
Czechoslovakia	1978
Hungary	1978
Poland	1978
Romania	1978
Brazil	[1]1979
	[2]1985
Republic of Korea	1978
Venezuela	1987

[1] pig iron only
[2] other steel product

These agreements apply to EEC products only. They are negotiated annually, commencing 1 January.

In addition, there is an inter-industry agreement on special steels from Spain, which we understand is negotiated on an annual basis during the period of Spanish transition to full Community obligations.

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to restrain imports of flexible manufacturing systems from Japan and Taiwan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. There is an inter-industry restraint arrangements on machining centres and numerically controlled lathes from Japan.

BSC (Advertising)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has on the sums paid by the British Steel Corporation to advertising agencies since 11 June 1987;

(2) what information he has on the expenditure incurred by the British Steel Corporation on television advertising in the period from 11 June 1987 until the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: None. All recent advertising by the British Steel Corporation has been at BSC's own initiative and expense.

Intellectual Property

Mr. Jim Lester: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he intends to consult the World Intellectual Property Organisation about the general compatibility of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill [Lords] with the requirements of the Berne convention; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations there have been between his Department and the World Intellectual Property Organisation about the compatibility of clauses 115 to 119 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill [Lords] as regards the jurisdiction of the proposed Copyright Tribunal over licences to perform a literary, dramatic or musical, work in public, with the provisions of article II, as limited by the United Kingdom's 1948 Brussels declaration, and article II ter of the Berne convention (Paris Act): and if he will make a statment;

(3) what consultations there have been between his Department and the World Intellectual Property Organisation, about the compatibility of clause 65(3) of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill [Lords] with paragraph 3 of article II bis of the Berne convention (Paris Act) as regards the exemption for ephemeral recordings made by a broadcasting organisation by means of it own facilities and used for its own broadcasts; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what consultations there have been between his Department and the World Intellectual Property Organisation about the compatibility of clause 69(1) of the Copyright Designs and Patents Bill (Lords) under which the inclusion of certain works in a cable programme service would not be an infringement of the copyright in those works, with the provisions of article II bis of the Berne convention (Paris Act); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has not formally consulted the World Intellectual Property Organisation on the general provisions of the Bill, or on any particular clause, since the functions of the organisation do not include judging the compatibility of national legislation with the requirements of the Berne convention. We have, however, kept the organisation fully informed of the progress and contents of the Bill.

Mr. Ivan Boesky

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any information about takeovers, other than the Guinness takeover of Distillers, in which Mr. Ivan Boesky has been involved in a professional or personal capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: It is not our practice to reveal such information.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many alleged insider dealing cases are presently under investigation by his Department.

Mr. Maude: Fifteen cases of possible contraventions of the insider dealing legislation are presently being investigated, all of them by inspectors appointed by the Secretary of State.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what additional expenditure is expected in 1988-89 in connection with the sale of shares in Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Atkins: Residual expenditure is expected in 1988-89, mainly due to a delay in the payment of stamp duty to the Inland Revenue. Parliamentary approval for this expenditure will be sought in a Supply Estimate of class V, vote 9. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £2,500,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Public Purchasing

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much purchasing by Government and other public bodies is accounted for in the United Kingdom's gross domestic product; what estimates he has of the amount of public purchasing contracts by Government and other public sector bodies awarded to United Kingdom firms; and what estimates he has of comparable figures for other European Community countries.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Based on national accounts data, United Kingdom public sector final expenditure on goods and services (but excluding wages and salaries) and fixed assets in 1987 accounted for about one eighth of gross domestic product at market prices. Comparative information for European Community countries, which is on a slightly different basis and limited to general Government (that is, central and local government), is set out in the table.

United Kingdom firms account for about 98 per cent. of the value of United Kingdom Government contract advertised and awarded under European Community/GATT rules, with about 94 per cent. of goods and services supplied being of United Kingdom origin. Comparable figures are not readily available for other public bodies in the United Kingdom or public sectors in other European Community countries.

General Government final expenditure as percentage of gross domestic product

	per cent.	Year
United Kingdom	10·2	1984
Belgium	6·6	1984
Denmark	9·5	1984
France	7·3	1984
Germany	11·6	1984
Greece	n/a
Ireland	11·3	1983
Italy	9·4	1984
Luxembourg	15·4	1982
Netherlands	7·8	1984
Portugal	7·5	1981
Spain	5·4	1982

Notes:

1. Gross domestic product is at market prices.
2. With the exception of Germany, for which OECD data have been used, figures are derived from the latest EUROSTAT publication, with the year to which they relate indicated.
3. Figures for certain current receipts and sales of fixed assets are netted off in the published expenditure figures.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Polyester Fabrics

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why polyester fabrics enclosing flame-retardant polyester are still approved for use by his Department.

Mrs. Currie: Only the flame retardant (FR) forms of polyester fabric or treated cotton are recommended for use as primary and secondary covers enclosing FR polyester in-fill for continental quilts used in the NHS. All supplies under national contract comply with these requirements.

Leaflets FB22

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 89, what steps he has taken to ensure the availability of leaflet FB22 in all those local offices where claimants from the ethnic minorities affected use the services of the local office; and if he has any plans to produce the leaflet in addition in Greek and Turkish.

Mr. Portillo: Social security series FB22 is a group of six minority language leaflets giving the same general overview of benefits as the English-language leaflet FB2 "Which benefit?" There are plans to produce a new set of translations later this year in seven languages: Urdu, Hindi, Gujerati, Bengali, Punjabi, Chinese and Turkish. Translations into other languages, including Greek, are being considered.

All the FB22 series leaflets will be available from social security offices and copies will be sent out to local and national ethnic minority organisations, and to welfare and advice organisations. Posters advertising the leaflets will also be produced in minority languages. They will be displayed in social security offices and will be available to organisations that request them.

Nursing in London Study

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the "Nursing in London" study.

Mr. Newton: Copies have been sent to the Health Service and placed in the Library today.

Free School Meals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking amendment of section 77 of the Social Security Act 1986 to enable local authorities to receive directly the £2·20 included in the family credit to compensate for the loss of free school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Representations have been received from one local authority. Paying the £2·55 directly to local authorities would be inconsistent with the Government's policy of providing benefits to working families wherever possible in the form of cash rather than kind. There would in any case be significant practical difficulties.

Maternity Payments

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the number of maternity payments made in 1987-88 to women in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) family income supplement.

Mr. Portillo: The number of social fund maternity payments made during the period 6 April 1987 to 8 April 1988 was as follows:

	Number
To people receiving supplementary benefit	178,509
To people receiving family income supplement	9,896

Housing Benefit

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional cost in the first year of operation of raising the proposed cut-off for housing benefit from £6,000 of capital to £10,000.

Mr. Portillo: Of the order of £60 million on the assumptions contained in the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 18 April 1988 at columns 341-42.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provisions exist for payment of benefit to a young person, living away from home, awaiting a place on a YTS course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I assume that the hon. Member refers to under 18-year-olds who, from September, will not be entitled to income support except in prescribed circumstances. The Government intend that young people under 18 who have applied for a youth training scheme and have good reason for being away from home, or have no parental home, will be entitled to income support, subject to the normal rules, during the child benefit extension period. This is the additional period (16 weeks for summer school leavers, and 12 weeks for others) during which their parents would be entitled to claim child benefit for them if they were at home. Regulations have not yet been laid, but our intention is that those with good reason for living away from home will include young people who have recently been in local authority care, those at risk of physical or sexual abuse if they remain at home, those under the guidance of the prison or probation service or a social services department who have been advised to live away from home and those whose parent or guardian is unable to support them because, for example, he or she is in prison.

The Government have guaranteed that every young person who wants a youth training scheme place will be offered one before the end of the extension period.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, whether acceptance of a place on a YTS course leads to eligibility for income support for a young unemployed person living away from home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Government intend that someone under 18 who is receiving a youth training scheme training allowance will be able to receive income support to supplement his training allowance if it is insufficient, by income support standards, to meet his living expenses, for example because he is in accommodation on a "board and lodging" basis. We plan to lay regulations later this summer to prescribe the circumstances in which someone under 18 will have title to income support.

Retirement Age

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the retirement ages of men and women in each of the countries of the EEC.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1987)", a copy of which is in the Library. Section IV contains information concerning retirement ages for men and women in each of the EC member states.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients were waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 September 1987.

Mr. Newton: The figures for the end of September 1987 show that, on a comparable basis with previous waiting list statistics, the in-patient waiting list was 662,000. This is 4 per cent. less than the March 1987 figure of 687,000, and 3 per cent. less than the September 1986 figure of 681,900.

As a result of changes resulting from the introduction of the new Körner NHS information system from April 1987, additional information is also available, for example on the number of patients with a booked date of admission, the number of patients who have put off the date of their operation, the number of patients admitted to hospital from the list, and the number of patients awaiting treatment as day cases.

A statistical bulletin describing this information more fully has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Mrs. L. Scotson

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will urgently review the benefit entitlement of Mrs. L. Scotson of 2, Marshgreen cottages, Hartfield, East Sussex.

Mr. Scott: I wrote to the hon. Member about this case on 19 April.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many requests for funding have been received from organisations supporting those addicted to tranquillisers; how many have been given assistance; and how many have been refused and for what reason.

Mrs. Currie: Six organisations offering support specifically to those dependent on tranquillisers have applied for central Government funding since 1984. Four of these have received grants. The two remaining applications are still under consideration.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to provide any funding for the Council for Involuntary Tranquilliser Addiction in Merseyside.

Mrs. Currie: We have already provided funding for several organisations on Merseyside experienced in the field of tranquilliser addiction including the following:

Name	Total funding £
Mainstream (Warrington)	81,534
Merseyside Drugs Council (St. Helens)	70,893
Merseyside Drugs Council (Wirral)	61,563

These are all supported by the local statutory authorities. Mersey region has been allocated a total of £2,177,756 under the central drugs initiative. No request for funding has been received by the Council for Involuntary Tranquilliser Addiction, which I understand is a locally based pressure group.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of his Department's offices where partitions have been strengthened in sections where the public have access over the past six months.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 18 April at column 344.

HIV Testing

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in the light of research undertaken on surgical glove punctures at Leicester general hospital, he will introduce routine pre-operative HIV testing for patients and regular screening for surgeons.

Mr. Newton: The health care workers sub-group of the expert advisory group on AIDS intends to review its "Guidance for Surgeons, Anaesthetists, Dentists and their Teams for Dealing with Patients Infected with HTLV III", issued in 1986, and will take into account any relevant evidence. Meanwhile, as my hon. Friend is aware, the expert advisory group's report "AIDS: HIV Infected Health Care Workers", published last month, concluded that the risk of the virus being transmitted in a health care setting is extremely low, and stressed that no case of a patient being infected by a health care worker has been reported anywhere in the world.

National Childbirth Trust

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date in 1987 an application was received from the National Childbirth Trust for a three-year grant commencing on 1 October 1987; for what amount the application was made; what previous grants have been made to this group; and when he expects a final decision on the current application to be made.

Mrs. Currie: An initial application from the National Childbirth Trust for section 64 funding for a further three years was received early in April 1987. The relevant financial information was not received until September 1987.

The request was for:

£58,000 for 1987-88
£62,000 for 1988-89
£65,000 for 1989-90
or alternatively a sum of £62,000 for each of the three years 1987-88 to 1989-90 inclusive.

Previous grants to the Trust were:—

£2,500 for 1977-78
£10,000 for 1978-79
£10,000 for 1979-80
£11,250 for 1980-81
£15,000 for 1981-82
£15,000 for 1982-83
£15,000 for 1983-84
£55,000 for 1984-85
£58,000 for 1985-86
£42,000 for 1986-87
£31,000 for 1987-88

We expect to respond shortly.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to make regulations extending the powers of the occupational pensions board to modify the rules of occupational pension schemes to enable them to reduce surplus funds in accordance with schedule 22 to the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend has intended making regulations under section 64(1A) of the Social Security Act 1973 to enable the Occupational Pensions Board to authorise modification of the rules of occupational pension schemes to enable them to reduce any surplus in scheme funds in any of the ways specified in schedule 22 to the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. The board, to which draft regulations giving effect to this proposal were referred, has received legal advice that regulations made under section 64(1A) could not work in the way intended. I have decided, therefore, to withdraw the draft regulations and to await the report of the board on the matters which I have referred to it today, before proceeding further.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will invite the occupational pensions board to consider whether further measures are needed to safeguard the interests of members of occupational pension schemes, the role of trustees of such schemes and associated issues.

Mr. Scott: I have today asked the occupational pensions board to consider and report to my right hon. Friend on the following issues:

(i) the balance to be struck between employers' legitimate interests and those of members of occupational pension schemes;
(ii) the involvement of pension schemes in company mergers and takeovers;
(iii) the extent to which decisions of the trustees of occupational pensions schemes should be unanimous and the circumstances in which one or more trustees may act on their own;
(iv) the need for independent trustees of pension schemes;

(v) whether restrictions should be placed on investments by pension funds in companies to which they relate; and

(vi) any other measures to safeguard the rights of members.

My right hon. Friend has asked to receive the board's report before the end of the year.

Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the proportion of families with children dependent on supplementary benefit who received one or more single payments, broken down into two and one-parent families.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 April 1988]: The latest available figures are as follows:

Percentage receiving single payments

	Per cent.
One-parent families	12·7
Two-parent families	23·7
Total: all families with children	36·4

The information relates to single payments made in the twelve months preceding the February 1986 annual statistical inquiry to claimants in receipt of benefit at the time of the inquiry. As a result, it does not record all the single payments made in the year.

Ambulances (Emergency Calls)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Avon ambulance authority met the ORCON standard for emergency calls in 1986.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 April 1988]: In 1986-87 the Avon ambulance authority exceeded the ORCON standards for emergency calls. This information is contained in the latest package of Health Service indicators which is in the Library.

Private Ambulances

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to involve health authorities in the standards achieved by private ambulances along the lines of the regulations applied to private nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Private ambulance companies are free to operate subject to the provision of common law and traffic legislation. We have no current plans to introduce further legislation, but the Department is keeping the matter under review. Health authorities continue to be responsible for the standards of service for patients which they may buy in.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during 1987 a higher private tender submitted under the competitive tendering process in the National Health Service has been accepted in preference to a lower in-house tender; in which district health authorities this occurred and with which contracts; and what were the reason given for this course of action.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 26 April 1988]: This information is not available centrally since under the terms of departmental guidance evaluation of tenders is a matter for the health authority concerned. Where a district health authority decides that there are compelling reasons for not accepting the lowest tender it is expected to notify its decision to the appropriate regional health authority.

The 1987 National Audit Office reports on competitive tendering for support services in the NHS provides the best available information on practice in rejecting the lowest tender bids. Of the 29 cases which NAO examined nine involved a decision to reject the lowest tender. In two of these cases commercial contractors were rejected in favour of in-house tenders and in the other seven cases one commercial contractor was rejected in favour of another. Eight of the contracts were for domestic services and one for laundry services. The main reasons to reject the lowest tender were as follows:

	Number
a. Inadequate hours tendered for job required	4
b. Inadequate proposed staffing levels	1
c. Inadequate or incomplete tender submission	2
d. Doubts on feasibility not dispelled on interview	1
e. Small cost difference linked to wider operational, personnel and financial considerations	1

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bulbs (Imports)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has of the proportion of bulbs imported from the Netherlands and examined by plant health inspectors to ensure that they are soil-free;

(2) whether he will list the seaports and airports where Dutch bulbs have been imported in 1987; and whether sufficient plant health inspectors have been available to examine each consignment.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the last import season, which ended in February, our plant health and seed inspectors examined just under 10 per cent. of all consignments of bulbs imported from the Netherlands. They checked for plant pests and excess soil. The inspectors work to a planned pattern of import checks on representative samples of a wide range of plants, bulbs, vegetables and so on, and covered this satisfactorily; it is not considered necessary to check each consignment of imported bulbs.

The main ports of arrival for Dutch bulbs last year were Felixstowe, Dover, Harwich and Hull although small quantities may have been imported through other points of entry. Most inspections of imported bulbs are carried out at the importer's premises or nurseries.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations from individual customers of companies in the Netherlands about the state of bulbs they have imported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to propose any change before 1992 in the system of inspecting bulbs imported from other EEC countries

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no basic changes in mind at present, but our overall system of import inspections is flexible and can be adapted to meet particular needs.

Bulbs (Inspection)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will institute a system of total field inspection for bulbs, to be paid for by growers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. I see no reason to introduce total inspections of all bulb fields. So far as exports are concerned, growing season inspections are already necessary for bulbs intended for European Community member states and certain other countries. Under our domestic legislation charges are made for these inspections.

Bulbs (Exports)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the countries other than the Netherlands to which the United Kingdom has exported bulbs in the last two years; and whether any country has complained that the imported bulbs were not soil-free.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Leaving aside exports to the Netherlands, the United Kingdom has exported bulbs in the last two years to the United States, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the Republic of Ireland, Sweden, Switzerland and Austria. Small quantities have been sent to several other countries. None of these importing countries has complained that the bulbs were not soil-free.

Animal Feedingstuffs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the new system of registration and control of medicated animal feedingstuff.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Two statutory instruments will shortly be laid before Parliament to implement the first part of new controls on medicated animal feedingstuffs. A central feature is a requirement that all manufacturers of medicated feedingstuffs must register with the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain or the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and agree to abide by a code of practice. Registration will take place in two stages: 1 July 1988 is the operative date for those with more sophisticated facilities, and 1 July 1989 for the remainder. Fees will be charged to cover the costs of administering and enforcing the register. Further controls on licensing and sale and supply of medicinal feed additives are being prepared. It is intended that these should also come into force on 1 July 1989.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Transfer)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants have been transferred since 1979 in the relocation of Government Departments and agencies from London and the south-east to the regions.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 31 March 1988, at columns 610-11, to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Arnold).

Government Agencies (Relocation)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what cost savings have been made by the relocation of Government agencies to the regions since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, since no records are kept centrally of cost savings from relocations by central Government agencies. However, a recent report has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland evaluating the dispersal of part of the Overseas Development Administration from central London to East Kilbride in 1981. This offers evidence of the significant financial and other advantages which can be obtained through relocation. I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend intends to publish this report in the near future.

Chancellor of the Exchequer (Television Interview)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy of the transcript of his interview on the "This Week/Next Week" programme on 24 April in the Library.

Mr. Lawson: No; but I understand that a transcript is available from the BBC.

Finance Bill (Notes on Clauses)

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the notes on those clauses of the Finance Bill to be taken in Committee of the whole House will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Major: Yes. The appropriate notes on clauses were placed in the Vote Office earlier today.

WALES

Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the conditions of employment of chairmen of health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: There are no conditions of employment as such for chairmen of health authorities, but I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of a note of guidance which is given to them on appointment.

Council Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to introduce to the cost-floor sale in relation to the sale of council-owned houses; and in what way he proposes to ensure that such changes do not cause an unacceptable reduction in the public sector rented housing stock in rural areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Grist: An amendment to the Housing Bill has been tabled which provides that only costs which have been incurred within eight years before the sale will be taken into account in calculating the cost floor.

This modification will enable more tenants to buy their own homes. In areas of outstanding natural beauty, national parks and designated rural areas the opportunity will remain for landlords to repurchase a property if it is resold within 10 years.

Chernobyl (Compensation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for review he has received from farmers in Wales claiming to have suffered losses as a result of the Chernobyl disaster but who had not been compensated under the Government's scheme; if he will give the date range when these applications were made; if each such application was considered individually; on what date a decision was taken on them; how many of these applications he has rejected; and if he will make a statement on the general pattern of the defects in the applications which led to their rejection.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 11 January 1988 the National Farmers Union in Wales presented to my Department 56 cases that it considered to have been inadequately compensated by the direct losses scheme under the Chernobyl compensation arrangements. The evidence submitted by the union did not reveal any special problems or anomalies not already covered by the existing compensation arrangements. The union also confirmed that no new principles of compensation had been identified. I wrote to the chairman of the NFU in Wales on 23 March 1988 rejecting the 56 cases.

A detailed examination of those individual cases showed that they fell into four broad categories:

(i) 10 cases where the producers concerned received compensation under the direct losses scheme in amounts varying from £191 to £3,672, but where the producers concerned alleged that they had incurred greater costs than the compensation they had received;

(ii) 25 cases where the producers received compensation under the scheme in amounts from £275 to £3,312 but where they were claiming more because they sold only a proportion of their animals in the three week qualifying period and as a result considered that not all their costs had been compensated;

(iii) 17 cases where the producers concerned received no compensation under the direct losses scheme since they sold their animals outside the qualifying period;

(iv) Four cases which fell outside the terms of the scheme.

A primary objective of the compensation arrangements was to get money to the affected producers as quickly as possible and it was agreed by the farming unions that this made it impossible to deal with all cases on an individual basis. It was similarly agreed that the inevitable consequence of this approach was that the compensation could not be matched precisely to the amount that might have been lost in every individual case. This agreement pointed firmly to the conclusion that the 10 cases in category (i) should be rejected.

The 42 cases in categories (ii) and (iii), were based upon sales outside the three-week rule of the agreed scheme and had to be rejected. The NFU accepted this principle at a meeting with me on 28 September 1987.

Finally, the remaining cases in category (iv) fell entirely outside the terms of the agreed scheme. In one case, the producer chose to keep extra animals on his holding; the second claim related to the monitoring and marking scheme and the remaining two claims were for alleged price blight on animals sold clean after derestriction. There was no basis for those claims to be considered within this review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales have received compensation arising from losses following the Chernobyl disaster; and what has been the total amount of money paid in Wales by way of such compensation.

Mr. Peter Walker: As at 15 April 1988, a total of £3,323,948·61 has been authorised for payment covering 6,808 claims from farmers in Wales.

Bus Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bus services have been discontinued in (i) Gwynedd, (ii) Clwyd and (iii) Powys since 26 January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of bus routes discontinued since 26 January 1987 are:

	Number
Gwynedd	8
Clwyd	14
Powys	Nil

In the same period the numbers of new routes introduced are:

	Number
Gwynedd	20
Clwyd	15
Powys	2

These figures indicate a net increase in bus routes.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the trade unions concerning the privatisation of the steel industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The privatisation of the British Steel Corporation and the implications for its employees are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, I believe that BSC plants in Wales are well placed to take advantage of the new opportunities presented by privatisation and I am always willing to meet the unions involved in the Welsh steel industry.

Mentally Handicapped Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered (i) mentally ill and (ii) mentally handicapped patients there were in the Clwyd area health authority in 1987 and 1979; how many staff were employed with groups (i) and (ii) in 1979 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The following figures relate to resident patients and staff numbers in mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in Clwyd:

Resident patients[1]

	1987	1979
Mental illness hospitals and units	528	656
Mental handicap hospitals and units	72	79

[1] As at 5 April.

Consultants, nursing and other professional staff[1]

	1986	1979
Mental illness hospitals and units	511·0	460·8
Mental handicap hospitals and units	100·0	79·2

[1] Whole-time equivalents, as at 30 September.

Hygicare Ltd., Wrexham

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how long Hygicare Ltd., located in Wrexham, had to wait for outside financial appraisal for a regional development grant application from his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department does not conduct outside financial appraisals for regional development grant purposes.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the area of land approved for forestry grant aid in each of the six years to 31 March in Wales; and if he will state the area of land afforested or restocked in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The information is as follows:

Area of land approved for planting or restocking (hectares)	2,002	2,175	1,811	2,466	4,580	3,470
Area of new planting or restocking grant-aided by the Forestry Commission (hectares)	1,067	1,177	1,040	1,177	988	2,204

SCOTLAND

Local Authorities (Social Security Changes)

8. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet Scottish local authority associations to discuss the implications for local authority manpower and expenditure in Scotland of the changes in the social security system; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the manpower and financial implications for local authorities as a result of the changes in housing benefit regulations.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities regularly to discuss local government finance. Our next meeting will be on 29 April.

Local Government (Employment Trends)

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about trends in employment in local government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numer of full-time equivalent staff employed by Scottish local authorities fell by 3·9 per cent. between December 1979 and December 1987. Apart from one minor fluctuation, the trend has been steadily downwards until last year when numbers showed a 1·5 per cent. increase.

Dundee

20. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last made an official visit to Dundee.

Mr. Rifkind: I last visited Dundee on 30 March when I accompanied my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Rating Reform

21. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the impact of the community charge on people on low incomes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from Members of Parliament, other individuals and various organisations. Those on lower incomes will be protected by the rebate scheme, which will take account of ability to pay.

31. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the cost of introducing the community charge to the Borders region.

Mr. Lang: There have been no recent representations about the cost of introducing the community charge in the Borders.

37. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about progress in compiling registers for the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: Compilation of the community charges registers is a matter for community charges registration officers, who from 1 April were empowered to undertake inquiries for this purpose of responsible persons at each address, and who are required to prepare the community charges register by 1 October.

44. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the numbers seeking exemption from the payment of the poll tax as a result of the revision of forms currently being issued by the local registrars.

Mr. Lang: Exemption from liability to pay the personal community charge in Scotland arises from the provisions of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 and not from any revisions that might be made to forms issued by community charges registration officers.

45. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the cost of introducing the community charge in the Highland region.

Mr. Lang: The total additional capital allocation which I have given Highland regional council in respect of the implementation of the community charge in 1987-88 and 1988-89 is adequate to meet the council's requirements. I am considering a letter from the council about the way in which the allocations are split between these years.

Court of Session

22. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any proposals for speeding up the conduct of business in the Court of Session; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Delays in the conduct of business in the Court of Session were reduced during 1987. Recommendations aimed at securing the speedy disposal of business were made in the report of the review body on the use of judicial time in the superior courts in Scotland, chaired by Lord Maxwell and published on 18 July 1986. Most of these recommendations, which fall within the responsibility of the Lord president of the Court of Session, have been implemented. In addition the Court of Session has been engaged in reviewing many aspects of its work in order to progress it effectively.

Inward Investment

23. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the aggregate value of inward investment to Scotland since 1979; and how many jobs have resulted therefrom.

Mr. Lang: The estimated aggregate value of inward investment to Scotland from 1979 to date is £2·9 billion with the prospect of the creation or safeguarding of 64,980 jobs.

Labour Statistics

24. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of employees in employment and the total number of employees in manufacturing industry, standard industrial classification 2-4, in Scotland in June 1979 and June 1987.

Mr. Lang: The total number of employees in employment is estimated to have been 2,102,000 in June 1979 and 1,886,000 in June 1987. For manufacturing the figures are 604,000 for June 1979 and 395,000 for June 1987.

Breast Cancer Screening Unit (Ayrshire)

25. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet made arrangements for setting up a breast cancer screening unit in Ayrshire; and if he will outline arrangements made for Ayrshire women in the interim.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The introduction of a national breast cancer screening service in Scotland for all women aged between 50 and 64 will be a phased programme. The first four centres, in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Dundee, will come into operation during the course of this year and we aim to have the remaining centres in operation by 1991. We shall consult individual health boards about the location and commissioning of the remaining centres required to provide a national screening service. The current diagnostic facilities for breast examination will continue to be available in the normal way for women in Ayrshire and elsewhere.

CBI Scotland

26. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Confederation of British Industry (Scotland) concerning the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps in frequent touch with the Confederation of British Industry (Scotland) on matters concerning the Scottish economy. When addressing CBI members in Glasgow on 19 February he called attention to the significant advances made in the Scottish economy in recent years and to the favourable conditions for further growth which has been created by the Government's policies to stimulate enterprise and improve competitiveness.

Housing Benefit

27. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had about the effects of the new changes in housing benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received several letters about the changes to housing benefit. Housing benefit policy is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

49. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Glasgow district council regarding the effects of the changes in housing benefit on the management of its housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

SHARPEN Report

28. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish his findings on the SHARPEN report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report on the Scottish Health Authorities Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties — the SHARPEN report — is a working document that is under consideration by the Scottish Health Service Planning Council. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to receive the planning council's advice about the report and its recommendations shortly.

Hospital Building

29. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish National Health Service hospitals were built in the last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of all hospital developments are not held centrally as minor capital projects are delegated to health boards. Four major projects were completed and opened in 1987.

Scottish Bus Group

30. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make a statement on his detailed timetable proposals for the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend does not yet have detailed timetable proposals for the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group, although he proposes to seek powers at an early opportunity. We are still considering the best arrangements for privatisation.

Oil Fabrication Industry

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he is taking to ensure the future of the oil fabrication industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The best tonic for the oil fabrication industry is an economic climate which encourages investment and development in the North sea: and that is what this Government are providing, notably through the oil taxation changes announced in the Budget.

Nuclear Waste

33. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when officials of his Department will next meet Nirex to discuss plans for nuclear waste disposal in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Office officials have no plans to meet Nirex for this purpose, but meet it from time to time with representatives of other Government Departments to discuss radioactive waste management in a United Kingdom context.

Nursery Education

34. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for increasing the provision of nursery education in Scotland; and what percentage of three and four-year-olds he expects to have the opportunity to receive nursery education in 1990, 1995 and 2000.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of provision for nursery education is for education authorities to determine in the light of their assessment of relative priorities. I cannot predict the aggregate effect of their decisions in future years.

Community Care

35. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to announce what policy changes he intends to make following his consideration of the Griffiths report on community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

38. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the chairman and other representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities formally on 4 December 1987 when he discussed the rate support grant settlement for 1988-89 and related matters.

Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations

39. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his decision on the level of grant to the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham) on Tuesday, 12 April, Official Report, column 46.

In 1988-89 grant to local councils of social service will be increased by £120,000 and grant to SCVO will be reduced to £90,000. Local councils may purchase services from SCVO. Notwithstanding the reduction in grant, SCVO will receive substantial support from central Government funds in 1988-89 and I am confident that it can continue to make a useful contribution to the promotion of voluntary sector interests.

Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968

40. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts of money paid out by regional and islands councils under section 12 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Payments by local authorities under section 12 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968

Regional or Islands Council	1985-86 £	1986-87 £
Borders	3,691	3,995
Central	11,135	11,760
Dumfries and Galloway	3,496	4,586
Fife	37,467	37,511
Grampian	18,882	25,597
Highland	5,572	12,189
Lothian	42,425	56,645
Strathclyde	386,659	447,457
Tayside	13,603	13,633
Orkney	516	520
Shetland	7,620	2,989
Western Isles	3,723	6,183
Scotland	534,789	623,065

Electoral Registration

41. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for action to combat the decline in the numbers on the electoral register in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The preparation of electoral registers is the statutory duty of the electoral registration officers. My right hon. and learned Friend is confident that their aim is to produce as comprehensive and accurate a register as possible, and proposes to support them as before with appropriate publicity campaigns.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

42. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not done so, though officials of his Department met representatives of the association last month.

Tree-Planting Policy

43. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Forestry Commission to discuss planting policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the Forestry Commission from time to time to discuss various matters.

National Farmers Union

46. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next discuss the future of the agriculture industry with the National Farmers Union of Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: My noble Friend the Minister of State and I regularly meet the union. We both attended the 75th anniversary dinner in Glasgow on 10 March and my noble Friend addressed the annual general meeting the following day. My noble Friend last met the union's president on 8 April for a discussion on a range of current issues and plans to continue to meet him and his colleagues at regular intervals.

Police Strength

47. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of police forces in Scotland which are below their establishment levels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at 31 March 1988, five Scottish forces were operating below their authorised establishments. The details are as follows:

Force	Authorised establishment	Actual strength	Difference
Dumfries and Galloway	344	343	−1
Lothian and Borders	*2,435	2,419	−16
Northern	620	600	−20
Strathclyde	6,954	6,775	−179
Tayside	1,001	991	−10

* This figure includes an increase in establishment of 50 constables approved in March 1988. These posts are due to be filled during the course of 1988-89.

Housing Stock

48. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional finance for housing authorities to accelerate repair, maintenance and rehabilitation schemes in the public sector housing stock in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 28 March, I announced details of the final housing capital allocations for 1988-89 for all district and islands councils. Allocations in respect of the housing revenue account block, which covers capital expenditure by local authorities on their own stock, totalled £445·2 million, an increase of £58 million on the provisional allocations issued in December 1987. These allocations are not hypothecated fior specific purposes and it is for each authority to determine its own priorities and to programme expenditure accordingly within the resources available to it.

Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped Patients

50. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet each of the Scottish health boards so as to discuss funding arrangements for long-stay mentally ill and mentally handicapped patients going into community care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend, I regularly meet health board chairmen to discuss a range of matters. Local arrangements for the funding of community care of former long-stay, mentally ill and mentally handicapped patients are matters for health boards and local authorities to determine from within the considerable resources which we make available to them and which have been increased substantially since 1979.

Private Companies (Departmental Relationships)

51. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the procedures governing relationships between his Department and private companies.

Mr. Rifkind: No. I see no need to review the present procedures, which are well understood and effective.

Aerosols

52. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to ban the use of aerosols in the buildings of the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Tobacco

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department has carried out on the effectiveness of the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 in preventing the purchase of tobacco products by children under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling), 22 February, Official Report, column 104, he has now given instructions for the information about women who have been amniocentesis tests to be centrally held and periodically published in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in plans to upgrade the A1 on the northern side of the border; and whether the proposals will extend the redevelopment as far as Lamberton in Berwickshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the last seven years five major improvement schemes, plus several minor improvements, have been completed on the A1. There are proposals for a bypass of Cockburnspath, currently the subject of a public local inquiry, and for junction improvements on the Haddington bypass. Planned improvements do not extend to Lamberton.

Monofilament Net Ban

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions, and for what reasons, the Crown has sought postponements in proceedings in the Appeal Court relating to the monofilament net ban.

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton: The case has not yet been called in the Appeal Court, having been twice withdrawn, by common consent, from the roll of cases. The reason for the delay is the need to obtain official English translations of two analogous European cases, which recently came before the European Court of Justice. These are considered to be essential to a proper consideration of the instant case by the Appeal Court. The case will be re-enrolled as soon as possible.

Dounreay

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make his announcement over the planning application and reporter's report for the European demonstration reprocessing plant, applied for by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels Limited, at the nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The full report of the public local inquiry into the proposed siting of the European demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay was submitted by the reporter on 30 March to my right hon. and learned Friend, who now has it under careful consideration. It is not possible to say when he will be in a position to announce his decision.

Sheriffs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the general public statutes and law reports made available to sheriffs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sheriff court libraries are supplied with all Acts of Parliament and statutory instruments relating to Scotland. Subject to the requirements of the judiciary the following law reports are supplied: "Scots Law Times", "Session Cases", "Scottish Criminal Case Reports", "Scottish Civil Law Reports", "Greens Weekly Digest" and "Road Traffic Reports". In addition the larger courts receive copies of "All England Law Reports", "Common Market Law Reports" and the "Common Market Law Review".

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what precise role he will have in determining the research, development and utilisation of nuclear power in Scotland if his proposals for the privatisation of the electricity generating and supply industry are implemented.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: After privatisation the electricity supply industry will continue to be responsible for decisions about its own research and development and the operation of its nuclear power stations. The Government's role in energy research and development will remain the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report of his review into cardiac surgery provision in Scotland will be available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Specialist Services Advisory Committee has undertaken a review of cardiac surgery provision and is now preparing a full report which I expect to receive in the summer.

The committee is recommending that the volume of cardiac surgery undertaken in Scotland be increased over the next five years, and that facilities be provided for an additional 400 operations per year. I have decided that as part of our determined attack on waiting lists, the cardiac surgery unit at Aberdeen royal infirmary will be centrally funded to carry out 150 heart operations per year in the near future and 300 operations per year within 5 years. Funding of the centre at Edinburgh royal infirmary will be increased to allow an additional 140 operations to take place there. Last year 2,125 operations were undertaken in Scotland.

We shall be considering the committee's other recommendations when their full report is available.

District Authorities (Statistics)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report for each district authority in Scotland for the latest year for which figures are available, showing (a) the electorate and estimated population, (b) expenditure per elector on environmental health services, housing maintenance, leisure and recreation, (c) the level of district rate and rate support grant, (d) the number of council houses and the average rent and (e) the number of new council houses completed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The information for the year 1987-88 is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. Expenditure on environmental health services and leisure and recreation is based on provisional outturns.
2. Housing maintenance expenditure is the budgeted expenditure reported in "Rating review" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (C.I.P.F.A.).
3. Rate poundage after selective action.
4. R.S.G. is after abatement. The figures are R.S.G. entitlements based on provisional expenditure outturns. An Order to give effect to them will be laid shortly.
5. The electoral roll figures exclude attainers which numbered about 62,000 in 1987-88.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People (Training)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration is being given to the needs of disabled people to ensure that an accurate assessment and an appropriate personal action plan is drawn up for them in the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The initial assessment of trainees in employment training, leading to the production of individual action plans, will be carried out by a network of training agents. For trainees with disabilities who require specialised or extended assessment which a training agent is unable to deliver, the specialist help of the employment rehabilitation centres and ASSET teams run by the employment rehabilitation service will be available. MSC will expect training agents and training managers to have premises and facilities which are suitable for people with disabilities as part of their required equal opportunities policy. Help will be available to providers, where necessary, in the form of grants towards the costs of necessary adaptations to premises and equipment, to meet the needs of particular individuals.

Tourism

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage regional tourism.

Mr. Lee: My Department is actively working with the English Tourist Board, the British Tourist Authority and the 12 regional tourist boards to encourage the widest possible spread of tourism throughout England.

Health and Safety at Work etc. Act

Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding amendments to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act.

Mr. Nicholls: I am, of course, aware of the Bill proposed by the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) and of the 1987 TUC resolution on health and safety. However, I am not aware of any formal representations regarding amendments to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act.

Job Creation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the ratios of increased jobs in the first three months of 1988 are between (a) part-time and full-time, and (b) temporary and permanent.

Mr. Lee: The latest available figures are for December 1987. Between December 1986 and December 1987 there was a net increase of 507,000 in the size of the civilian employed labour force in Great Britain. Of this increase 49 per cent. was attributable to growth in part-time employment and 51 per cent. to growth in full-time employment. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

The regularly published employment estimates do not separately identify those in temporary or permanent employment. The labour force survey provides such information on a different basis, and the latest available figures are for spring 1987. Estimates based on the labour force survey indicate that between spring 1986 and spring 1987 there was a net increase of 334,000 in the number of employees and self-employed in Great Britain. Of this increase, the percentages attributable to growths in temporary and permanent employment were 18 per cent. and 82 per cent., respectively.

Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest total number of people unemployed in the constituency of Basildon, and for the same period in each year since 1983.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon in March of each year since 1984. Unemployment statistics for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Number
March 1984	6,686
March 1985	7,120
March 1986	6,643
March 1987	5,950
March 1988	4,362

TRANSPORT

Panama Canal

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what are the estimated numbers of ships plying to and from the United Kingdom via the Panama canal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is not available. We continue to keep the situation concerning the canal under review in close consultation with British interests.

British Rail

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will urgently review his policies for subsidies to British Rail with a view to improving the quality of its services.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government's policy on subsidising public transport was set out in the response to the Transport Select Committee's report on the financing of rail services (HC 420). Current and planned investment levels in the railways are already higher in real terms than at any time since the 1960s and are designed to bring a significant improvement in the quality of service for the customer.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a statement on the implications for transport policy of the report of the National Economic Research Associates on the quality of services of British Rail, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has already told the National Union of Railwaymen, which commissioned the National Economic Research Associates report, that he would like to discuss it with it.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the criteria laid down by the group of local authorities offering financial support to the Settle-Carlisle railway, stating his response in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The local authorities have offered £500,000 towards the capital costs of restoring Ribblehead viaduct, subject to the following conditions:

a. that British Rail continues to maintain and operate the line;
b. that the line's future be guaranteed for a period of at least 20 years;
c. that the contributions are a "one-off" which should not be seen as setting any precedent and no further requests for financial support should be made;

d. that the revenue support contributions already agreed for the next two years will not be extended beyond that period.

My right hon. Friend is still considering this offer and the particular conditions attached to it.

Pulford-Gresford Bypass

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the road bridge over the railway carrying the new Pulford to Gresford bypass will be such that it could accommodate double rail track if necessary.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The crossings of the Wrexham-Chester railway line were each designed to accommodate the single track which British Rail indicated would meet its existing and future operational requirements.

The two bridges carrying the road over the railway line (one in England and one in Wales) might possibly accommodate a second track if the present track was realigned. The feasibility would need to be examined in detail with British Rail. The major bridge in Wales which carries the railway over the bypass could only be single track.

DEFENCE

NATO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's northern naval defences of the Danish parliamentary decision on 14 April to inform visiting naval captains that Denmark does not accept nuclear weapons on its territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 19 April at column 670.

Tornado Aircraft (Goose Bay)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornado aircraft are currently deployed at Goose bay, Canada.

Mr. Freeman: There are currently nine Royal Air Force Tornados deployed at Goose Bay, Canada.

Pay

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage increase in armed forces pay in each year since 1974.

Mr. Freeman: The information is as follows:

Pay review in	Equivalent Percentage Increase for full year
1974	13
1975	29·5
1976	[1]£6 per week
1977	5
1978	13
1979	32·5
1980	16·8
1981	10·3
1982	6·1
1983	7·2
1984	[2]4·9
1985	7·1
1986	[3]5·6
1987	4·9
1988	6·4

Notes:

[1] £6 per week was equivalent to between 18·3 per cent. for a private and 3·8 per cent. for a colonel on appointment.

[2] A staged increase, the full amount awarded was 7·6 per cent.

[3] A 7·5 increase deferred to 1 July 1986.

Radar Projects

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Blue Yeoman radar project has replaced Cold Witness.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force Tornado F.2 aircraft are currently in storage at RAF St. Athan; what is the reason for their withdrawal from service; what plans exist for their future disposal or use; and what is the estimated cost of implementing these plans.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the course of the initial production run of the Tornado F2 a number of design changes were made to this aircraft type which resulted in a significant improvement in capabilities. The improved aircraft was designated the Tornado F3. Current plans are for all 18 original F2s to be updated in the early 1990s to a standard similar to that of the F3s. Whilst awaiting this upgrading, 14 of these aircraft are in storage at RAF St. Athan. No contract for the work to upgrade these aircraft has yet been negotiated.

Radar

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to issue tenders for the development and production of a surface-wave over-the-horizon radar for the United Kingdom air defence ground environment.

(2) what discussions are taking place with the United States Navy concerning the establishment of a site in the United Kingdom for a United States Navy relocatable over-the-horizon radar;

(3) what collaboration is taking place between his Department and the United States Air Force systems command on the development and deployment of a north-looking over-the-horizon radar;

(4) what research has been conducted by the Royal Signals and Radar Establishment into the propagation of high frequency radar signals in Arctic regions;

(5) in what year the air defence ground environment senior engineering officers conference first received a briefing on over-the-horizon radar.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom and the United States are collaborating in a joint programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting, and assessing the potential value of, an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom. These studies, in which RSRE Malvern is involved, are still continuing and there are no firm plans for the issue of tenders for further stages. The air defence ground environment senior engineering officer's conference was first briefed on over-the-horizon radar in 1987.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the function and progress of the Blue Yeoman radar project.

Mr. Sainsbury: The name Blue Yeoman covered the development of a long-range air defence radar which entered RAF service some 20 years ago and it is now being phased out. One such radar was retained at RSRE. This radar has undergone a major improvement programme and is being used to carry out research into a number of topics relating to advanced radar techniques and systems applicable to future long-range air defence.

North Atlantic Defence System

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department is making to the United States Air Force Command, control and communications project known as the North Atlantic defence system.

Mr. Sainsbury: The North Atlantic defence system is a NATO programme sponsored by both SACEUR and SACLANT, part of which will comprise communications and command control and information systems. It is eligible for funding through the NATO infrastructure budget, to which the United Kingdom in common with most other NATO nations contributes. Once the systems are in place the United Kingdom would expect operational benefit from NADS and also to make a substantial operational contribution to the effectiveness of the system through links with the United Kingdom air defence ground environment and the E3A AEW aircraft.

RAF Phantom (Crash)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the crash in the North sea of a Royal Air Force Phantom aircraft on Wednesday 20 April.

Mr. Freeman: On 20 April a Royal Air Force Phantom FG1 of 43 Squadron, RAF Leuchars crashed into the North sea during the course of the air defence exercise Elder Forest. Tragically, both crew were killed in the incident.

The Royal Air Force has convened a board of inquiry into this accident, which will examine fully all the circumstances with a view to establishing its cause, and preventing a recurrence. A summary of the board's findings will be published in due course in the usual way.

Menwith Hill, Harrogate

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agreements authorising the use of Menwith Hill communications base, Harrogate, by the United States National Security Agency.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The use of Menwith Hill by the United States Department of Defence is subject to confidential arrangements between the United Kingdom and United States Government.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) United Kingdom personnel and (b) United States personnel are currently employed at Menwith Hill communications base; and what expansion has recently taken place or is planned.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Currently some 850 United States personnel and 340 United Kingdom personnel are employed at Menwith Hill. No significant change in numbers has taken place recently nor is any foreseen.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expenditure in each year on (a) capital equipment and buildings and (b) revenue for each of the past 10 years at Menwith Hill communications base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Full financial information of the kind requested is not held by the British Government and could only be obtained from the United States authorities at disproportionate cost.

Submarines (Welding Errors)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) welding errors in relation to Trafalgar Class submarines at Vickers and (b) the loss of Trident parts off Walney Island in the Mull of Galloway.

Mr. Sainsbury: I wrote to the hon. Member on these matters on 25 April.

Federal Radionavigation Plan

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has made to the United States of America about the federal radionavigation plan published in November 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 21 April 1988]: None.

Ammunition Transport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the last occasion on which a lorry loaded with ammunition caught fire on a motorway; if he will name the motorway; if he will describe the incident; what improvements have been made in the arrangements for the safety of ammunition transport since then; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The last occasion on which a lorry loaded with ammunition caught fire on a motorway was on 30 January 1988 at approximately 06.30 hours about ¼ mile beyond junction 27 of the M4 westbound. The fire was caused by a piece of sound insulation material falling from the engine cover on to the hot turbo-charger which ignited. The vehicle was brought safely to a stop and the fire extinguished using on-board equipment. The civil fire brigade and police attended. The vehicle was stationary on the hard shoulder for approximately 30 minutes and after repair continued on its journey without further incident. No changes to existing safety arrangements were thought necessary following this incident.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last substantive review of the arrangements for the security of ammunition transported by road.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The security of ammunition transported by road is governed by Statutory Instrument 1977 No. 888 — The Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977 and detailed guidance and instructions are contained in service regulations. A new health and safety regulation — The Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations is due to replace the present legislation in late 1988 and Ministry of Defence arrangements are being reviewed to ensure they comply with the new requirements.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what checks are undertaken to ensure that drivers of ammunition lorries are not under the influence of alcohol during their journeys.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Statutory Instrument 1977 No. 888—The Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977 — and unit standing orders specify that no personnel under the influence of alcohol are to be allowed to handle or convey ammunition. Responsibility for enforcing this regulation rests with the authorised representative at the despatching and receiving points.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the interests of security, he will review the present system for the identification of explosive and projectile ammunition carried by lorries.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The requirements for labelling explosives, and for externally labelling vehicles carrying explosives, are contained in SI 1983 No. 1140 — Classification and Labelling of Explosives Regulations 1983. The classification of explosives is based upon the United Nations international system of classification, which is kept under periodical review. The hazard classification is displayed in the interests of public safety and a separate review of this particular practice in the interests of security is not considered necessary.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is considering any new security measures for the transport by road of projectile ammunition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Security standards for the transport by road of ammunition are laid down in service regulations. These are continually reviewed.

Rimnet

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Rimnet's role in relation to the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

The Rimnet system has no role in relation to the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the wartime role of Rimnet.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

There is no specific wartime role for Rimnet.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Local Government Elections

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made since the answer on 2 November 1987, Official Report, column 618, in enabling 'I' voters to exercise their mandate at local government elections in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: I assume that the hon. Gentleman refers to my answer of 4 November, at column 618. The position remains as previously stated.

WALES

National Health Service

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the performance indicators for the Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office has since 1982 published a booklet of key statistical indicators for NHS management in Wales which shows comparative information on the district health authorities in Wales over a wide range of services. The latest edition of the booklet (No. 6 1987) was published on 21 January and a copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

The Department has also produced its own version of the DHSS computerised performance indicator package, which enables comparisons to be made between England and Wales at regional, district and unit level. A copy of the first edition of this package relating to 1985-86 data is available in the Library of the House and a 1986-87 edition will be issued during the summer.

Performance indicators are intended for use as a management tool for planning services and reviewing achievement. They help identify variations in the way services and resources are used both between authorities and over time. The indicators are intended to raise questions and provide a means of helping to diagnose problems. They do not, indeed cannot, offer any kind of judgment about the relative quality of the services provided, since it must be recognised that a wide and complex range of factors affect this.

As part of the 1988-89 planning process, district health authorities have been asked to set themselves performance targets, by reference, as appropriate, to published performance indicators. These targets will be reviewed as part of the 1988 annual review process and their achievement will be monitored in subsequent years.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to obtain European Community acceptance of a principle whereby the ewe premium is paid on existing flocks and on the number of ewes in the flock on a specified reference date.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Small Firms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the amount of financial assistance given to small firms in Wales in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on the aid given to small firms in Wales by agencies and Departments other than the Welsh Office is not held centrally. Under the grant schemes directly administered by my Department the following amounts have been offered to small firms[1] in 1987:

	£ thousands
Regional selective assistance	6,404
Regional development grant	36,818
Business improvement services	2,158

[1] Employers of 200 or less (including associated and group companies).

In addition, substantial support is provided to the small firms sector by a number of other Departments and agencies, including the Welsh Development Agency, Mid Wales Development, the Wales Tourist Board, British Coal Enterprise, BSC (Industry) and the Department of Trade and Industry. The recently-launched enterprise Wales intitiative places a special emphasis on support for small firms by way of consultancy, investment and innovation grants.

Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the level that the Welsh non-domestic rate would be in the current financial year.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh average non-domestic rate poundage for 1988-89 is 257·6p.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in descending order the percentage increase in (a) the domestic rate, and (b) the commercial rate together with the poundages of each Welsh district in 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: The information requested on domestic and non-domestic rate increase between 1987-88 and 1988-89 for Welsh districts is shown in the following table:

Grant-related Expenditure Allocation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in rank order the budgeted spending per head over grant-related expenditure allocation at ratepayer level for Welsh local authorities on the same basis as the criteria announced on 17 November in respect of the phasing out of domestic rates.

Mr. Grist: The difference between budgeted expenditure and grant-related expenditure for 1987-88, per head and at ratepayer level, is as follows:

My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of the Environment, announced on 25 April that the threshold in England for inclusion within the residual rating arrangements will be increased so that only those areas where combined budgeted expenditure for 1987-88 of the authorities operating in that area exceeded the combined needs assessments for the area by more than £200 per head will be affected. In any case, part IV of the Local Government Finance Bill is not applicable to Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Flecknote

Q98. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Flecknote, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Vacant Land

Q99. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to a publicly owned site of vacant land.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

British Time

Q152. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister what interdepartmental consultation she has established to assess the financial and commercial consequences of British time being one hour behind the rest of Europe.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary explained in a reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 31 March, at column 683, all Departments are being asked to consult interested groups as to the likely effect of harmonising summer time, and time in general, with other members of the Community.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 April.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 April.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Benefits

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will provide for better co-ordination of benefits for those on the community programme, by ensuring that social security benefits are as payable by the Department of Health and Social Security to participants for the first week as unemployment benefit is payable in similar circumstances.

The Prime Minister: Unemployment benefit ceases to be payable as soon as a person joins the community programme. Similarly, title to income support ceases immediately where the work is for more than 24 hours a week. Because both benefits are normally paid fortnightly in arrears, a person joining the community programme will receive his last benefit payment either immediately before joining the programme or during the first week.

European Community (Unemployment)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy at the next meeting of the European Council to call for an inquiry into the level of unemployment in the EEC by comparison with the European Free Trade Association group of European countries; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Care

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he is yet in a position to publish the outcome of his review of the case for extending to the voluntary sector the arrangements for disclosure of information about those seeking to work with children; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what safeguards have been devised to ensure that employers in the voluntary sector respect the confidentiality of information disclosed to them by the police under the arrangements for disclosure of information about those seeking to work with children.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department is currently discussing with representatives of the voluntary sector detailed plans for the setting up of a national unit on a pilot basis which would act as a contact point between the police and selected voluntary organisations on the disclosure of information from police records on those seeking to work with children. These discussions will cover arrangements for ensuring that the confidentiality of information disclosed will be respected.

Remand Centres and Open Prisons

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the proposals invited for the construction of private urban remand centres and open prisons emanate from non-United Kingdom companies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of submitted proposals for the construction of private urban remand centres and open prisons involves the conversion of existing property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All but one of some 40 invitations to submit proposals for the construction of urban remand centres and open prisons were sent to companies registered in the United Kingdom. An advertisement was also placed in the EC journal, and a press release was sent to national newspapers and trade journals, It is not possible to say what proportion of the proposals may involve the conversion of existing property until the responses have been received and analysed.

Police Interviews (Tape-recording)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations now operate the procedure for tape-recording interviews with suspects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

The rate at which tape-recording is implemented in individual force areas is for chief officers to decide having regard to the available resources and after consulting other agencies in the criminal justice system.

I understand that, as at 31 March 1988, most forces in England and Wales had begun phased implementation programmes, and that two forces were tape-recording interviews at stations throughout their force areas. I further understand that the small number of forces, which have not yet started pilot tape-recording schemes, plan to do so over the next few months. It remains the intention to secure full implementation of tape-recording arrangements throughout England and Wales by 1991.

Children (Penal Custody)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regions sentenced no 14-year-olds to penal custody in the last year for which information is available.

Mr. John Patten: The central records available to me for 1986, which may be incomplete, show no custodial sentences imposed on males aged 14 by the courts in four of the 43 police force areas in England and Wales: City of London, Gloucestershire, Suffolk and Warwickshire. Custodial penalties are not available for female offenders aged 14.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the subsequent criminal behaviour of 14-year-olds who have been sentenced to penal custody over the past 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information relates to detention centre trainees aged 14 to 16 reconvicted within two years of discharge from a prison department establishment and is published in table 8.8 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 210), copies of which are in the Library. Information specific to 14-year-olds could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Television

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many hours of television are produced for regional consumption by BBC Wales—Cymru and HTV Wales in 1988; and what are his estimates for each year to 1992.

Mr. Renton: The most recent available information is as follows. In 1987 HTV Wales produced for broadcast by the IBA 391 hours of regional interest material, and in the year ending 31 March 1988 410 hours of Welsh regional service material were broadcast on BBC1 and BBC2. In addition HTV produced 455 hours and the BBC 520 hours for broadcast by S4C. The additional information sought is not readily available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what categories of programmes are excluded from contributing to the independent producers 25 per cent. target announced in November 1986;

(2) what categories of programmes are excluded when calculating the total hours of new programmes produced by broadcasters for the purpose of assessing the proportion to be produced by independent broadcasters announced in November 1986.

Mr. Renton: Both the BBC and the IBA have accepted, subject to satisfaction on the cost and quality of programmes provided by independent producers, the target of commissioning from them by the end of 1992 25 per cent. of original television output, drawn from a wide range of programmes but excluding, in the case of programmes broadcast by the BBC, news and news-related daily current affairs programmes, continuity and Open University output. In the case of programmes broadcast on ITV, material provided by ITN, continuity, the news-related studio output of TV-am and regional service material provided out of regional newsrooms will be outside the 25 per cent. target, but the IBA does not rule out the possibility that independent producers may contribute material in these categories.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the total number of new programmes produced by the BBC and ITV companies in 1988; and what are his forecasts for each year to 1992, showing in each case the total number of hours.

Mr. Renton: The most recent available information relating to programmes originated for network broadcast on BBC and ITV is as follows. In the year ending 31 March 1988 6,065 hours of such programmes were broadcast on BBC1 and BBC2, and in 1987 3,165 hours were broadcast on ITV (including programmes provided by ITN but not by TV-am). Present BBC plans envisage an increase to 6,241 hours by 1992. Comparable forecasts for ITV are not readily available.

Passports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that Mrs. Margaret Cynthia Moss of 9 Dungannon Drive, Thorpe Bay, Essex, who submitted her passport for renewal on 6 February receives her passport as soon as possible; and if he will consider establishing a procedure for cases of urgency so long as the current delays in passport applications and renewals continue.

Mr. Renton: The passport was returned by registered post on 25 April. As Mrs. Moss had not indicated a date of travel on the application form, her application was not accorded the priority it would otherwise have received under existing procedures.

Member's Correspondence

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate will receive a definitive answer in respect of Mr. S. Taggert, Home Office reference number T160429, about whom a letter was sent on 25 March.

Mr. Renton: A reply will be sent shortly.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reply to the letter dated 7 December 1987 from the hon. Member for East Lothian concerning an application for naturalisation by Miss Anne-Margarethe Stroobants.

Mr. Renton: The application was approved in January, and a certificate sent to the applicant in March after she had taken the oath of allegiance. The certificate has, however, recently been returned, because the applicant had left her last known address.

I shall be replying shortly to the hon. Member's letter.

Lotteries

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received from experts in the running of state lotteries for charitable purposes; and what consideration he is giving to any such representations;

(2) what recent consideration he has given to the running of a national state lottery to raise and distribute funds for good causes.

Mr. John Patten: As far as I am aware, none of the representations about state lotteries for charitable purposes which we have received in the past year has been from people expert in running such lotteries. We keep the question of running a national state lottery under review but have no current plans to introduce one.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of individuals and organisations to whom Mr. F. J. Warn, an official in his office, wrote on 7 March, concerning offensive weapons and the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords].

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The list for the letter of 7 March is as follows:

The Retail Consortium
British Sports and Allied Industries Federation
British Toy and Hobby Manufacturers Association Ltd.
Gun Trade Association Ltd.
British Importers Confederation
British Wholesale Traders Association
Federation of Wholesale and Industrial Distributors
Mail Order Traders Association
Co-operative Union Ltd.
Association of Toy, Stationery and Fancy Goods Wholesalers
British Cutlery and Silverware Association
Whitby and Co.
Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Association of County Councils
British Hardware and Homeware Association
Martial Arts Commission
British Veterinary Association
British Antique Dealers Association Ltd.
Association of Chief Police Officers
A number of Government Departments

Officials subsequently wrote to a number of other organisations in the same terms including the Angling Foundation, the National Anglers Council and the London and Provincial Antique Dealers' Association Ltd.

TRANSPORT

Airedale Route

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a further announcement about sections of the A629-A650 Airedale route to the east of Crossflatts, Bingley.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement in the summer. It should be followed shortly thereafter with the publication of draft orders for Airedale stage 3 (Crossflatts to Cottingley Bar).

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles are currently licensed for public highway use in Britain, and if he will express the figures by class of vehicle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At 31 December 1987 there were 22,151,831 vehicles licensed for use on the road in Great Britain. The main classes are as follows:

	Number
Private/Light Goods:	19,249,459
Motorcycle	977,728
Heavy Goods:	608,857
Hackney (includes buses and coaches)	129,012
Other vehicles subject to duty:	442,447
Vehicles exempt from duty (includes emergency service vehicles and exemptions for the disabled):	744,328

Coaches (Speed Limiters)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if speed limiters are to be fitted on all coaches regardless of age.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 18 April, at columns 364-65.

Vehicles (British Standards)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the light transmission requirements embodied in BS4110 will be applied to all roadgoing vehicles; and when the noise limits embodied in BSAU193T2 will be applied to all roadgoing vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These British standards are being applied where they are relevant. In the case of BS4110, this is motor cyclists' eye protectors. Other standards apply to light transmission requirements for motor vehicles. BSAU193 sets standards for replacement exhaust systems and silencers for motor cycles which are not appropriate to other vehicles.

Life-jackets

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether life-jackets carried on helicopters and aircraft operating over the North sea are required to meet the criteria described in specification No. 5, issue 2, dated 23 November 1979 issued by the airworthiness division of the Civil Aviation Authority; if he will define the use of the term "choppy sea" and the term "disturbed water" contained in paragraph 7.1 of the specification document, according to wave height; and whether this specification has been superseded;

(2) if he will be reconsidering the specifications relating to life-jackets in the near future; and if he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that legislation requires life-jackets to keep the wearer's head clear of the water even if the wearer is unconscious and the water is rough or choppy.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department of Transport is responsible for the approval of life-jackets carried in United Kingdom registered ships and the Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the approval of life-jackets carried in aircraft.

The specifications for Department of Transport or CAA approved life-jackets have both for many years required the support of an unconscious person in a seaway in an effective manner. Experience to date has not suggested that their performance was in question. However, the findings of a recent research project commissioned by the Department of Energy suggest that in certain rough sea conditions these life-jackets may not be as effective as previously thought.

My Department therefore intends to give very serious consideration to the findings of this particular research project to determine whether changes to the specifications for ship life-jackets are now necessary.

The Civil Aviation Authority has confirmed that aircraft life-jackets are required to meet the criteria described in CAA specification No. 5, issue 2, which has not been superseded. The terms "choppy sea" and "disturbed water" in the specification are intended to mean sea state 3, which is consistent with wave heights of 3 to 5 ft and a mean wind speed of 18 knots.

The authority believes that the specification No. 5 requirements are adequate and life-jackets approved to this standard are satisfactory. The need to ensure compatibility with intended immersion suits is catered for in working draft CAA specification No. 19, issue 1 (dated March 1988) para. 31. Any immersion suit approved by the CAA must be fully evaluated for its compatibility with the intended life-jacket; righting tests being performed by live but limp subjects. Such tests may be more representative of an unconscious person than those achieved using authometric dummies, but the CAA has initiated a review of the various test methods currently used to establish which of these is the most realistic.

Dalton-in-Furness Bypass

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the current position and progress on the Dalton-in-Furness bypass on the A590; whether there has been a delay in determining the route; and what are the estimated dates for laying of the order and public inquiry for commencement and completion of the bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Progress of the scheme has been slightly delayed by the need to investigate further the ground conditions along the proposed route of the bypass. We expect to publish statutory orders towards the year end. If required a public inquiry will be held in mid 1989. Construction could start in 1991 and the road open to traffic in 1993.

Swarthmoor Bypass

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position and progress on the Swarthmoor bypass on the A590.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to receive our consultant's report on route investigations in June. I shall make a further announcement when we have considered it.

Melton Brow Road Improvement

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position and progress on the Melton Brow road improvement on the A590 near Lindal-in-Furness.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a report by Cumbria county council acting as the Department's agent, an improvement scheme has been accepted into the regional trunk road programme. The next stage will be the publication of orders under the Highways Acts towards the end of the year.

Motor Cycles (Leg Protectors)

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of comments made in response to his consultation on motor cycle leg protectors, he is satisfied that there has been no misrepresentation of results in the research carried out by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am completely satisfied that the laboratory's work has been carried out in a totally unbiased manner and to the highest professional standards, including the publication of methodology and results.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made by his Department in preparing the specification for motor cycle leg protectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Further tests have been carried out at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory using a wider variety of vehicles and different angles of collision. The results have continued to confirm the potential benefits of well-designed leg protection. Results of independent testing have also been brought to our attention. More testing will be carried out and will include collisions at higher speeds. We are looking at our technical specification in the light of the expert views we have received and of the continuing research. It is our long-established policy and practice to be thoroughly assured of the safety benefits of any specification before steps are taken to propose it in draft regulations.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy in what form Her Majesty's Government have received assurances from the United States Government that none of the United Kingdom plutonium exported to the United States of America since 1958 under the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement, and arising from civil reactors in the United Kingdom, has been put to any form of defence research in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 2 July 1984 at column 36.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), 12 April, Official Report, column 49, from which thermal reactors plutonium originated before being used at Sellafield to supplement the fuel for Dounreay fast reactor fuel; and how much thermal reactor plutonium in each year since 1979 has been put to fast reactor fuel fabrication use.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On 31 March 1987 some 6½ tonnes of safeguarded plutonium originating from thermal reactors had been made available for fuel for the Dounreay prototype fast reactor. Some 5½ tonnes of this originated from electricity board reactors and the remainder from reactors operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc. Quantities for individual years can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Coal Imports (Holland)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the amount of coal imported from Holland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal imports from the Netherlands were as follows:

	Thousand tonnes
1979	22
1980	23
1981	8
1982	43
1983	86
1984	304
1985	306
1986	218
1987	664

Non-fossil Fuel

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the proposed statutory obligation on the distribution companies to contract for a specified minimum proportion of non-fossil-fuelled generating capacity will include generators using as fuel municipal refuse and other waste as non-fossil-fuelled generators.

Mr. Parkinson: The details of the obligation are still under consideration, but I recognise the potential value of waste as a source of fuel.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of full-time employees in the coal industry; and what proportion of the numbers so employed in 1979 this represents.

Mr. Parkinson: The number of full-time employees in the coal industry at the end of February 1988 was 123,822, which is 43 per cent. of the corresponding number at the end of February 1979.

Life-jackets

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the report prepared by the Robert Gordon institute of technology on life-jackets and immersion suits for the oil industry advisory committee of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have today instructed that copies of the report entitled "Lifejacket/Immersion Suit Combinations — In-water Performance Assessment" be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Firms

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the various forms of assistance available from his Department for the assistance of small firms; and what is the respective expenditure involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We operate a number of schemes which are specifically directed at small firms. Details are set out as follows.

(i) The consultancy initiatives which are available under the enterprise initiative offer financial support to independent companies or groups with fewer than 500 employees for between five and 15 days specialist consultancy in the following key management functions: quality, design, marketing, manufacturing systems, business planning, financial and information systems. DTI pays two thirds of the cost in the assisted areas and urban programme areas and 50 per cent. of the cost outside these areas. Total provision is £274 million over the next three years.

(ii) Regional enterprise grants, which were introduced on 1 April 1988, provide assistance to small firms with fewer than 25 employees for investment and innovation projects in the development areas. Grants of 15 per cent. of the cost of fixed assets in an investment project are available up to a maximum of £15,000. Grants of 50 per cent. of eligible costs in an innovation project are available up to a maximum of £25,000. DTI expenditure on these grants is expected to rise to over £50 million per year by 1990-91.

(iii) The business improvement services (BIS) scheme, which is jointly funded by the DTI and the European regional development fund, comprises a package of measures designed to assist firms with fewer than 200 employees. It includes an element which enables firms to claim grants of up to 70 per cent. of the cost of consultancy advice. The scheme is available to firms located in specified areas of England affected by the decline in the steel, shipbuilding, textiles and fishing industries. More recently BIS has been introduced in west Cornwall following the closure of the Geevor tin mine and in the Thanet travel-to-work area. Total expenditure on BIS will amount to £56·5 million over the period 1984-90, when the scheme will come to an end.

(iv) The competition for small firms merit awards for research and technology (SMART) is open to firms employing fewer than 200. The 100 best ideas put forward will each receive a 75 per cent. grant towards total costs of £50,000 (a maximum grant of £37,500) to develop a new product or process over the course of a year. The closing date for entries is 30 June 1988; the winners will be announced in November 1988. It is expected that after one year about half the winners will go on to a second stage in which the maximum award per firm will be £50,000.

In addition to these specific schemes, small firms may also take advantage of other forms of DTI assistance which is available to firms of all sizes:

Regional selective assistance
The export initiative
The research and technology initiative
The business and education initiative

Small firms in the inner cities are also helped through many of the projects supported by the Government's inner city task force, for which my Department is responsible. Overall expenditure by the task force is expected to total some £16 million in 1988-89.

EC Fusion and Eureka Programmes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress evaluated on the EC fusion and Eureka programmes arising from the Research Council of the European Council of Ministers meeting on 11 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Community's Council of Ministers (Research) in Luxembourg on 11 April. I should like to take the opportunity to give a brief account of the progress achieved on each of the main agenda items as well as the two specifically raised in the question.

On fusion, there was a general exchange of views on the Community's programme of research but no decisions were taken. The general hope was, however, that there would be further progress at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers (Research) at the end of June.

The Council discussed the relationship between the Community's research programmes and Eureka. There was agreement that the relationship needed to be clearly defined so as to ensure the two complemented each other and to avoid duplication of effort wherever possible. The Commission will prepare further ideas on this for the Council to consider at its next meeting.

The Council adopted a common position on DRIVE, a Community programme of research in the fields of IT and telecommunications applied to road transport. The programme, which will provide Community funding of 60 mecu (£40 million) over a period of three years, should help improve road transport efficiency and safety, and reduce its environmental impact.

On the Community Bureau of Reference, BCR, the Council adopted a common position on an R and D programme costing some 59 mecu (£39 million) over five years in the fields of applied metrology and chemical analysis. This will be important in the context of the completion of the single market, and will assist in the elimination of certain technical barriers to trade.

The Council also took a major step forward in unanimously adopting ESPRIT II, the largest single programme in the Community's 1987-1991 framework programme for R and D. It will over five years provide 1600 mecu (£1,056 million) of Community funding, with matching contributions from industrial partners and other contractors, for projects in micro electronics and peripheral technologies, information processing systems and some "applied" fields, namely, computer-integrated manufacture and integrated information systems. British companies and research institutes will undoubtedly make a major contribution to this programme and will benefit substantially from it. It is important to note that this major programme has a management structure modelled on that already successfully used in the earlier programme, ESPRIT I.

A common position was also adopted on DELTA, an exploratory programme of research extending over a maximum period of two years to apply new technologies including IT to open and distance learning. Community funding will amount to 20 mecu (£13 million).

The science programme, on which the Council adopted a common position, will promote co-operation and exchanges between scientists and laboratories in the Community: the funds will amount to 167 mecu (£110 million) over five years. The programme offers grants for travel, to fund research projects involving laboratories in more than one country and larger grants for specific projects of scientific promise, usually bringing together many laboratories in different Community countries.

In the field of biotechnology, the Council adopted a common position on the revision of the current multiannual research programme (1985-1989) which will increase Community funding from 55 mecu (£36 million) to 75 mecu (£50 million). More generally, it was agreed that the Community should develop a strategy in the area of biological research, taking account of wider international developments in this field. There was also an informal exchange of views on bioethical issues.

The Council had a further useful exchange of views on the joint research centre (JRC). Agreement was reached on the overall financial framework for the JRC's work and the Council gave further directions for the reforms which are needed to make the JRC successful and viable. We hope that it will be possible for the Council to reach agreement in June on improvements which will give scientific and technological value for money for the considerable Community investment there.

The Commission was also invited to prepare ideas for the Council on the relationship of technical norms and standards to technological developments in Europe, an issue which also has a bearing on the development of the single market.

Economic League

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Crown Prosecution Service will now begin prosecution of the Economic League for failure to file accounts and failure to complete an annual return; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: As the latest accounts and annual return for the Economic League have now been received and are on the public record, it is not intended to bring proceedings in this matter.

Voluntary Restraint Agreements

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions have taken place within or at the time of meetings of the Council of Ministers, on inter-industry voluntary restraint agreements, and within or at the time of which meetings.

Mr. Alan Clark: Inter-industry voluntary restraint agreements are negotiated by the industries concerned. I am not aware of any recent discussion within or at the time of meetings of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 478, by what means the Government informed the industries concerned with certain voluntary restraint arrangements that they saw no case for continuation; and whether they will place copies of such communications in the Library.

Mr. Alan Clark: The industries concerned were informed in writing through their trade associations. I have placed copies of these letters in the House Library.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will place in the Library a copy of the arrangements on footwear concluded between the industry concerned and the Republic of Korea, and a copy of the proposals for their renewal.

Mr. Alan Clark: This is a matter for the United Kingdom footwear industry and its counterpart in the Republic of Korea between whom the voluntary agreement is negotiated.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what form restraint agreements negotiated by the European Commission on behalf of the United Kingdom are notified to (a) the House and (b) the Select Committee on European Legislation.

Mr. Alan Clark: The contents of the informal voluntary restraint arrangements negotiated by the Commission on behalf of the United Kingdom are confidential and are not published.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list those restraint agreements negotiated by the European Commission in addition to the multi-fibre arrangement in certain limited textiles and clothing, giving the date of commencement and extent of each such agreement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Community has negotiated the following informal restraint arrangements on textile and clothing products. Apart from the arrangement with China, these arrangements cover trade in multi-fibre arrangement (MFA) products with the Community's preferential trading partners (with whom there is no separate bilateral MFA agreement). The restraint arrangement with China is linked to the EC/China bilateral textiles agreement, but relates to a product which is not classified in Customs terms as a textile product. Details of these arrangements are not published.

Turkey

Textile products: cotton yarn, certain cotton fabrics and acrylic yarns[1].

Present arrangements commenced 1 January 1987 (1 January 1988 for cotton yarn)

Egypt

Cotton yarn, cotton fabric and bed linen[1]. Present arrangement commenced 1 January 1987 (1 January 1988 for cotton yarn).

Malta

Trousers[1]. Present arrangement commenced 1 January 1988.

Morocco

Trousers[2]. Present arrangement commenced 1 January 1987.

Tunisia

Cotton fabric and trousers[3]. Present arrangement commenced 1 January 1987.

China

Surgical dressings. The restraint arrangement was negotiated at the same time as the current bilateral textile agreement with China and commenced 1 January 1984.

[1] Other products in these arrangements are subject to surveillance licensing. Coverage may differ between the United Kingdom and other member states.

[2] Coverage may differ between the United Kingdom and other member states.

[3] Coverage may differ between the United Kingdom and other member states. Certain other member states have special arrangements for goods subject to outward processing.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the United Kingdom asked the Commission of the European Communities to negotiate restraints on leather footwear from certain Eastern European countries; and on what date such restraints came into effect.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1975 the United Kingdom footwear industry negotiated bilateral arrangements with its counterparts in Poland, Czechoslovakia and Romania to restrain imports of men's leather footwear during 1976. Further restraint arrangements were made covering women's and children's leather footwear during 1977. From 1977 the European Commission has annually renegotiated a continuation of these arrangements on behalf of the United Kingdom industry.

Car Telephones

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate how many (a) car and (b) portable telephones were purchased in Britain for the first three months of the current year; and if he will express the figures as a percentage change for the same period for each of the last three years.

Mr. Butcher: There are no official statistics but the information I have is as follows:

	Number of units 1988 First quarter
Mobile telephones	33,000
Portable telephones	17,000

Note: Includes transportable and hand portable.
Source: BIS Mackintosh Ltd.

Information comparing these figures with figures for the same period in each of the last three years is not available.

Investment

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of investment by insurance companies and pension funds, as a percentage of total investment for each year since 1970; and what information he has as to comparable figures for (a) the European Economic Community, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan, (d) India, (e) South Korea, (f) Taiwan, (g) Bangladesh, (h) Pakistan and (i) South America.

Mr. Maude: The table shows net investment by insurance companies and pension funds as a percentage of total gross domestic fixed capital formation (excluding that by general government) for the United Kingdom.

Comparable figures for the other countries and areas listed in the question are not easily available. Some figures on financial accounts are published by the OECD for member countries but separate figures for insurance companies and pension funds are not given for all members. Data on fixed capital formation are published by the IMF for its members although a few are unable to supply these statistics. The relevant publications are "Financial Accounts of OECD Countries" and "International Financial Statistics", copies of which may be obtained from the Library of the House.

Life Assurance and Unit Trusts Regulatory Association

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if a decision has been reached on whether to give leave for the recognistion of the Life Assurance and Unit Trusts Regulatory Association.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the procedure laid down in the Financial Services Act, the Director-General of Fair Trading has reported on the rules and guidance submitted by LAUTRO to the SIB in support of its application for recognition as a self-regulating organisation. The director-general has reported that, as amended, LAUTRO's rules do not and are not likely or intended to have significant anti-competitive effects. Having had regard to the director-general's report, the Secretary of State has concluded that on the basis of the information presently available, LAUTRO's rules and guidance do not have, and are not intended or likely to have, to any significant extent, the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. The Secretary of State also has had regard to European Community considerations. Her Majesty's Government and the Commission have a common objective in promoting full competition and transparency in the marketing of life assurance. In order to comply with Community law LAUTRO will be notifying shortly its rules formally to the Commission in order to seek an exemption under article 85 EEC. The Commission will examine them, having regard to Community competition law and practice and the particular circumstances of the EEC insurance market as a whole. Against this background the Secretary of State has therefore today given leave to the SIB for the recognition of LAUTRO as a self-regulating organisation.

The director-general has also made a separate report on the rules and guidance submitted by LAUTRO in support of its application for recognition as a self-regulating organisation for friendly societies. Having had regard to this report, the Secretary of State has concluded that on the basis of the information presently available LAUTRO's rules and guidance do not have, to any significant extent, the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. The Secretary of State has also therefore today given consent to the SIB for the recognition of LAUTRO as a self-regulating organisation for friendly societies.

Unichem

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to make a decision as to whether to institute proceedings against Unichem plc for alleged breach of the Prevention of Fraud (Investment) Act 1958.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 26 April 1988]: My Department has obtained strict undertakings from Unichem to comply with the relevant statutory provisions in future. In the light of these assurances and having regard to all the circumstances, I have decided not to institute proceedings.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether leave has yet been given under section 120(2) of the Financial Services Act for the Securities and Investments Board to make recognition orders in respect of any investment exchanges or clearing houses.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1988, c. 47]: My right hon. and noble Friend has now considered, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, reports made by the Director General of Fair Trading on the rules, regulations, guidance and arrangements submitted by the international stock exchange of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland Ltd. and the Baltic Futures Exchange Ltd. and has concluded that on the basis of the information presently available to him he does not consider there is anything in the material submitted which has, or is intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. He has therefore given his leave to the SIB to make recognition orders in respect of both these investment exchanges.

ENVIRONMENT

BAOR Contracts

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to the West German Ministry of Construction to broaden the specifications required to allow British manufacturers to compete on equal terms when tendering for BAOR contracts; and what the result of such representations has been.

Mr. Chope: My Department has made representations both directly to the West German Ministry of Construction and, in common with other NATO partners, to the Federal German Government for the greater use of harmonised standards in respect of electrical and lighting products.

All electrical products which have a European (EC) standard and some with international (IEC) standards, are given the status of a German national (DIN) standard without alteration. However, only the DIN standard can be referred to in documentation because German construction regulations are based on them.

Discussions are continuing. Currently I am seeking to establish a list of those British products which have an EC/IEC standard which is referred to in the German DIN standard.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the value of the electrical and lighting contracts awarded for BAOR premises in 1987; and what proportion of these contracts were placed with (a) British and (b) German companies.

Mr. Chope: In 1987, of the £1¼ million worth of contracts for specialised electrical and lighting equipment placed directly by the PSA on behalf of the British forces in Germany, approximately £¾ million (60 per cent.) had been placed with British firms. The bulk of major electrical installation work carried out in Germany is, however, performed through contracts with the Federal Government's construction agencies as required under the status of forces agreement. The total value of work placed by these German authorities with electrical contractors was approximately £11½ million in 1987, but it is not possible to obtain a breakdown of this figure.

Newham (Rates)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for the London borough of Newham (a) the rate support grant for 1978-79, expressed in 1987 prices, (b) that figure expressed per capita of the population of the borough, (c) the same figures, expressed in 1987 prices, for each year since and (d) the percentage differences between the figures for each year.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Rate support grant in real[1] terms: 1978-79 to 1988-89
London borough of Newham

	Rate support grant (1987-88 prices) £ million	Year on year percentage difference in RSG Percentage	Rate support grant per capita (1987-88 prices) £	Year on year percentage difference in RSG per capita Percentage

Urban Programme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the successfully completed environmental programme schemes funded under the urban programme in 1985-86 and 1986-87 between £10,000 and £30,000 in value in the programme authorities.

Mr. Trippier: The number and total value of approved environmental schemes between £10,000 and £30,000 in urban programme authorities in 1985-86 and 1986-87 was:

1985-86		1986-87
Number	Value	Number	Value
511	£9·29	527	£9·35

These figures may exclude some late approvals, including some projects approved within larger environmental blocks and pools. Information about successfully completed schemes is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Small Shops

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the powers under which a local authority can offer financial assistance to the owner of a small shop to make it accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Chope: It is for local authorities to consider which powers might authorise the giving of financial assistance for access to the disabled to non-local authority premises. I wrote to the hon. Member on 21 March setting out a number of discretionary powers which might be appropriate for this purpose.

Civil Service Chauffeurs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many chauffeurs are employed in the Civil Service.

Mr. Chope: There are no central records held for this grade. The Government car service, which provides a chauffeur driven service to Ministers and heads of Department, employs 153 staff in this capacity.

Rates Exemption

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received seeking exemption of buildings used in connection with horse and pony breeding from rates.

Mr. Chope: The campaign by the Thoroughbred Breeders Association and other bodies interested in this matter has been carried on for some years now. Since January this year, however, we have received approximately 100 representations on this subject.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any request from British Coal's Opencast Executive for the relaxation of planning regulations for opencast coal mining.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. British Coal did comment on my Department's draft planning guidance on opencast coal mining. A copy of its letter of 17 June has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Richmond House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent buying stone for walls and paved areas, trees, shrubs, tubs and compost for the Richmond house office of the Department of Health and Social Security; and what is the latest estimate for the total cost of the building.

Mr. Chope: The cost of buying stone for paved areas and associated walls and steps around Richmond house was £450,000. The cost of buying trees, shrubs, turf and associated materials was £38,000. The current estimate of the total cost of the project is £41·4 million. This includes some additional work and acceleration costs to ensure DHSS occupation by the end of 1987. As I said in my answer on 8 December 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman), at column 97, the final cost will depend on settlement of the final account, including claims still being negotiated.

United States Military Bases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to recover as promptly as possible the debt of £31 million owing by the United States armed forces to the Property Services Agency from building works on military bases.

Mr. Chope: The steps outlined in paragraph 22 of the Public Accounts Committee's report on "Repayment Arrangements for Works Expenditure for US Forces", published on 20 April, have already yielded a substantial improvement. The estimated deficit at the end of the 1987-88 financial year is between £20 million and £22 million.

Employment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the calculations made by Mr. H. B. Lloyd in his paper entitled "The Financial Effects of Increasing Employment by One Million," a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), the Minister for Housing and Planning, in November 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. I am writing to the hon. Member enclosing a comment on Mr. Lloyd's paper which I sent to him in December 1987.

London Boroughs

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total indebtedness of each of the London boroughs; and if he will express this information also in per capita terms per resident in each case.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the information placed in the Library of the House on 14 March 1988 in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) at column 459.

Local Authorities (Employees)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take in the light of responses to his consultation paper which proposed an amendment to the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to restrict the rights of the public to inspect at the time of audit, information which a local authority holds about its employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have decided in the light of responses to their consultation paper to seek at the next convenient opportunity an amendment to the Local Government Finance Act 1982 so that, as proposed, all information which an authority holds about its employees would be excluded from public inspection, except information about gross pay, allowances, bonuses and overtime payments, which would continue to be open to inspection at the time of audit. My right hon. Friends consider that such an amendment would strike the right balance between safeguarding personal privacy and providing adequate public inspection for proper accountability.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magnisite Ltd.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will prosecute Magnisite Ltd., operating as Magnivision, for offering for sale ready-made reading spectacles without a prescription from a suitable registered practitioner, under section 21 of the Opticians Act 1958.

The Attorney-General: If the hon. Member has any evidence tending to disclose the commission of a criminal offence, he should give that evidence to the police.

Mr. Anthony Parnes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of that part of the evidence submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Los Angeles court in connection with the extradition proceedings against Mr. Anthony Parnes which was made publicly available in the United States of America.

The Attorney-General: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next hopes to pay an official visit to the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit the People's Republic of China.

European Foreign Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his counterparts from the other European Community countries; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 27 April at column 156.

Tel Aviv (Passport Renewals)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken for the British consulate in Tel Aviv to process an application from a British citizen for the renewal of a passport; and if any measures are being taken to reduce this time.

Mr. Eggar: Routine applications for renewal or replacement of passports are at present processed within an average period of two and a half weeks. More urgent applications are handled within one or two days and emergency cases are dealt with immediately. Staffing improvements are expected soon to reduce the routine waiting period to around one week.

Fentanyl

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place within the Geneva negotiations on chemical and biological weapons about the problems posed by the compound fentanyl; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The chemical weapons convention will apply to all chemical warfare agents whether or not they are explicitly named. It will also include a verification regime for certain chemicals produced in industry which are assessed to pose a risk to the objectives of the convention. Many detailed aspects of this verification regime remain to be resolved including the implication of chemicals such as fentanyl which are capable of modification. These issues are under consideration in Geneva.

Persian Gulf

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has been given by the United States Administration on their plans for broadening the scope of their role in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: We remain in close contact with the United States and other western countries with naval forces deployed in the Gulf. Our common objective remains to ensure the freedom of navigation in international waters. The practicalities of so doing are regularly reviewed.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any evidence of the use of chemical weapons by Iraq in its recent offensive in the Fao peninsula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to examine reports of the recent battle in the Fao peninsula. To date we have no conclusive evidence of the use of chemical weapons in that offensive.

Ethiopian Army (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any representations have been made regarding the use by the Ethiopian Army of chemical weapons, nerve gas, cluster bombs and napalm against people in Eritrea and Tigré.

Mrs. Chalker: No. We have no evidence that the Ethiopian Army intends to use such weapons. The United Kingdom unreservedly condemns the use of chemical weapons anywhere.

Mr. Abu Jihad

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the involvement of any Israeli Government organisation in the murder of the PLO official Mr. Abu Jihad in Tunisia; and what are the implications for his policy towards access to the United Kingdom of certain categories of Israeli citizens.

Mr. Mellor: Suspicions of Israeli involvement in the murder of Abu Jihad fall short of absolute proof. There are no implications for Israeli visitors to the United Kingdom.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any additions have been made to the staffing of Her Majesty's embassy in Panama in the past six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No additions have been made to the staff accredited to Her Majesty's embassy in Panama.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the current trading situation of British banks in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: We understand that the one British bank in Panama is operating within the same constraints, applied by the Panamanian authorities, as all other banks in Panama.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is currently being offered to British commercial interests in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy regularly exchanges information with British commercial interests in Panama in the course of its normal contacts, as do other posts overseas.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider providing additional resources to the Commonwealth Institute to enable urgent repairs to the copper roof to be undertaken.

Mrs. Chalker: The nature and urgency of work which may be required on the roof of the main galleries of the Commonwealth Institute, Kensington, is still being studied by the institute, and the implications for the institute's resources are not yet clear.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the amount of grant paid to the Commonwealth Institute in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Chalker: The total grants-in-aid from the Foreign and Commonwealth Vote for the last five years for the London and Edinburgh operations of the Commonwealth

Institute, including occasional ad hoc elements for special events, redecoration, maintenance and so on were as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	2·665
1986-87	2·673
1985-86	2·515
1984-85	2·350
1983-84	2·518

EMPLOYMENT

Docklands Liaison Group

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people form the Docklands liaison group; what are their names; and what has been their previous experience.

Mr. Nicholls: Currently nine people constitute the Docklands liaison group. With one exception, they had all worked for the Manpower Services Commission or the employment service in east London before joining the group.

The names and grades of the officials concerned are as follows:

	Grade
Mr. R. Mann	Grade 7
Mr. P. Kendrick	SEO
Mr. T. Goepfort	HEO
Ms. C. Hughes	HEO
Ms. J. Crosweller	EO
Mr. N. Reeve	EO
Mr. K. Crossman	EO

Labour Statistics

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of employment in (a) the north-east and (b) Houghton and Washington in numerical and percentage terms; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Full working population figures are not available for areas of this size. Employee figures can be given, but only for dates when censuses of employment are taken. At September 1984, the latest date for which census estimates are available, there were 882,700 employees in employment in the north-east; the figure for the Houghton and Washington constituency was 28,400. The figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

The earliest estimates on a comparable basis are for September 1981 when the previous census of employment was taken. There were then 940,600 employees employed in the north-east and 28,600 in the Houghton and Washington constituency.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current unemployment and unfilled vacancies figures on his Department's register for the Castleford travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 10 March 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the Castleford and Pontefract travel-to-work area was 7,947. On 4 March 1988, the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies of the community programme, registered at jobcentres which closely correspond to the Castleford and Pontefract travel-to-work area was 385.

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage fall in unemployment in each of the parliamentary constituencies in Cheshire since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants at 8 March 1984 and 10 March 1988, together with the percentage change for each parliamentary constituency in the county of Cheshire. The figures are affected by the change in the coverage of the count in March 1986.

Textile Workers

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of full-time and part-time workers employed in the textile industry for each year from 1970.

Mr. Lee: The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the standard industrial classification (SIC), and the series is broken by the introduction of the 1980 SIC, which reclassified certain activities, including the textile industry. The table gives the available information on the industry on a consistent 1980 SIC basis from June 1971.

Part-time male figures on this basis are available only from the censuses of employment carried out in September 1981 and September 1984, and quarterly thereafter. Comparable figures are not available for dates prior to June 1971.

Community Programme

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had from the organisers of the community programme about problems faced by those seeking work in the programmes as a result of benefit not being paid for the first week of the programme.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received no representations on this matter.

Hospitals (Staffing Levels)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the recommended staffing levels by patient category in English hospitals; and what are the current staffing levels in hospitals within the Pontefract area health authority.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

There are no recommended staffing levels by patient category in hospitals. Although regions have manpower staffing targets, the distribution between staff groups is a matter for regional decision.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 31 March at columns 665-69 which gave staff in post figures by health authority.

SCOTLAND

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each of the five Scottish new towns for the years 1974-75 to 1989-90, actual or estimated figures for housing stock within the host district council area analysed by the following ownership categories (a) development corporation, (b) district council, (c) other public sector, (d) owner-occupied and (e) private rented.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information on the numbers of domestic subjects on the valuation roll is published in the rating review estimates of income and expenditure summary volume by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) for the years to 1987. Details of owner-occupied and private rented stock by district are not available. Estimates for later years are also not available.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for (a) each of the five Scottish new towns (b) each of the district councils with new towns and (c) Scotland as a whole for the years 1974-75 to 1989-90 inclusive, the actual or estimated (i) capital expenditure, gross and net of capital receipts (ii) revenue expenditure and (iii) capital debt, expressed both in cash and as per capita amounts.

Mr. Lang: I regret that this information is not held in the form requested and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

"The Scotsman" (Break-in)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to the progress of inquiries into the break-in at the office of The Scotsman newspaper in Queen street, Glasgow, during the weekend of 23-24 April; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Boundary Commission for Scotland intends to conduct any further interim review of parliamentary constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Boundary Commission for Scotland has informed me that it intends to conduct interim reviews of seven parliamentary constituencies under section 3 of the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986. The constituencies are as follows:

Angus East, and Kincardine and Deeside:
Clackmannan, Dunfermline West, and Perth and Kinross;
Clydebank and Milngavie, and Glasgow Garscadden.

I understand that the reviews have arisen from alterations to local authority boundaries which those of the parliamentary constituencies concerned no longer follow exactly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Class Sizes

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the average class size for schools in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) West Germany, (iii) the United States of America and (iv) Japan.

Mr. Dunn: The readily available information is shown in the following table. There are no readily available data for the United States of America.

Country	Year	Class size up to 1st level[1]	Class size up to 2nd level[2]
United Kingdom	1984-85	[3]25·2	[4]21·4
	1985-86	[3]25·9	[4]21·3
Germany, Federal Republic of[5]	1982-83	22·7	[6]27·3
Japan[7]	1984-85	[8]33·3	[6]38·1

[1] Equates broadly with nursery and primary education.
[2] Equates broadly with secondary school education and non-advanced further education.
[3] Covers maintained primary schools in England. Includes classes where more than one teacher may be present.
[4] Covers maintained secondary schools in England. Includes classes where more than one teacher may be present.
[5] Data extracted from reply to a written European Parliamentary Question (1503/84).
[6] Covers lower secondary schools only.
[7] Includes private education.
[8] Covers only primary school education.

Literacy

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the literacy rates for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) West Germany, (iii) the United States of America and (iv) Japan.

Mr. Dunn: Comparable information on literacy rates in these countries is not available.

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the expenditure per primary school pupil for each of the years from 1976 to 1986 in Wakefield metropolitan council area.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil[1] in primary schools

	£ (Real Terms)[2]
1975-76	720
1976-77	730
1977-78	700
1978-79	715
1979-80	705
1980-81	740
1981-82	790
1982-83	815
1983-84	875
1984-85	870
1986-87	955

[1] Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.
[2] The cash figures for the earlier years have been repriced to 1986-87 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

English Teaching (Kingman Report)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received the Kingman report on the teaching of English in schools; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I received the report before Easter and expect to publish it tomorrow.

A-level Examinations (Higginson Reports)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has now received the Higginson reports on A-levels; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I expect to receive the Higginson report shortly.

Residential Colleges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review the functions of long-term residential colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is currently reviewing the outcomes of various experimental projects conducted at some of the long-term residential colleges. The colleges were asked for their views on their future role recently and their ideas will be discussed with them later in the year.

Pen Tops

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 15 March, Official Report, columns 982-23, what advice he has given to local education authorities in respect of detachable pen tops.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has now written to all local education authorities along the lines indicated in my previous answer. I am arranging for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, in the light of the recent launch of a specially designed safety air flow cap for detachable pen tops, what criteria he plans to recommend to chief education officers over the use of such products.

Mr. Dunn: The Department's letter of 21 March to chief education officers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, gives advice on various types of pen top and takes into account recent and imminent developments as reported to the Department.

Bracken Spores and Stomach Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on current research into a possible link between bracken spores and stomach cancer in humans.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that the expert advisory committee on carcinogenicity, which reports to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, will shortly advise on the possible hazards to human health from bracken in air, food and water. The need for further research in this area will be considered in the light of that advice.

Education Reform

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will issue guidance on the provisions he would expect to be contained in the planning and establishment of schemes of financial delegation for schools which local education authorities would be required to prepare under clauses 25 to 41 of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am today issuing draft guidance to all local education authorities and other interested parties on the action which local education authorities would be required to take under clauses 25 to 41 of the Education Reform Bill if it receives Royal Assent in its present form.

The principle of financial delegation to schools, the provisions for which are a central part of the Education Reform Bill, has been widely welcomed. The Bill affords only a broad framework. Within that, if the Bill receives Royal Assent in its present form, it will be for each local education authority to prepare its own scheme of financial delegation setting out their proposed arrangements for distributing resources between all their maintained county and voluntary schools, and for delegation to the governing bodies of all secondary schools and all primary schools with 200 or more pupils the responsibility for managing their budgets.

The draft guidance is being issued now to inform discussion of financial delegation to schools during the remaining stages of the Bill's passage through Parliament, to help local education authorities in their planning, and to give all concerned an early opportunity to comment. Comments are invited by 15 July 1988.

Copies of the draft guidance have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and in the Vote Office.

Students (Income and Expenditure)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the results will be made public of the comprehensive survey into students' income and expenditure referred to in the Government's response to the first report from the Education, Science and Arts Committee, Session 1986-87.

Mr. Jackson: The report on the survey is being published by Research Services Limited today. A copy has been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Exercise Excalibur

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates Exercise Excalibur is to be held; how many and what types of aircraft will be participating; and what areas of the United Kingdom will be affected.

Mr. Freeman: Exercise Excalibur III will be held on 29 April 1988 and will involve 44 USAFE aircraft including RF-4s, F-4s, F-16s, F-15s, F-5s, F-111s and A-10s. The exercise will be centred on Spadeadam range, but parts of north Yorkshire and Cumbria are expected to see aircraft at low level during their approach to the range.

NATO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent report from the 13 member state independent European programme group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation on armament development and procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European defence industry study was commissioned by IEPG Defence Ministers with the aim of identifying ways in which the competitiveness of Europe's defence industries might be enhanced. It was carried out by a group of eminent individuals under the chairmanship of Mr. Vredeling of the Netherlands. The group recommended a range of measures, including increased collaboration in defence research and the development of a more open and competitive European market in defence equipment.

IEPG Defence Ministers welcomed the report at their meeting last june. In particular, they agreed to press ahead with the IEPG's work on generating more joint research projects; and they tasked their armament directors to make proposals for the framework of a scheme within which a more open defence equipment market might be developed, for their consideration at their next ministerial meeting in the autumn.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom has imported any uranium for non-nuclear explosive defence purposes from the United States of America in any year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The then Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed the House on 17 January 1985, at columns 183-84, of the procurement of depleted uranium for the development programme of an anti-armour ammunition. Some of the material to which he referred was purchased from the United States as trial feed for prototype production. The House was informed on the same day of the Phalanx system deployed with the Royal Navy, which is purchased from the United States together with its depleted uranium alloy ammunition.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what chemical form any uranium imported from (a) Namibia and (b) the Republic of South Africa has been received in the United Kingdom for defence use.

Mr. Sainsbury: In line with the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 20 July 1987, at column 97, it has never been the policy of any Government to disclose the sources of our defence stockpile of uranium.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any United Kingdom plutonium has been exported, without safeguards, to the United States of America since May 1979 under the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for Energy, the hon. Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad), on 19 November 1984, at column 25, which quoted several earlier replies, including that given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chertsey and Walton (Sir G. Pattie) to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 25 April 1984, at column 506, which may now be updated to read, "during the past 17 years". I have nothing further to add.

Property Damage (County Donegal)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the last three years there have been complaints from (a) the Government of the Irish Republic, (b) Donegal county council or Donegal county councillors, and (c) persons residing in County Donegal, regarding damage to property alleged to have been caused by explosives set off by the Army in County Londonderry; what was the extent of such alleged damage; what compensation has been claimed; and what sums have been involved.

Mr. Freeman: As a result of explosives tests carried out at Magilligan point, County Londonderry, between November 1985 and 1986, a total of 53 claims for alleged structural damage to property were received from residents of the Greencastle area of County Donegal. Of these, 30 were pursued by the claimants. After careful investigation, those claims were repudiated by my Department in February 1987. My Department has received no complaints from Donegal county council or Donegal county councillors. Information relating to these claims has been exchanged with the Irish Government on a number of occasions since 1985.

Low Flying

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 were accounted for by aircraft from RAF Germany.

Mr. Freeman: Central records of usage of the United Kingdom low-flying system have not in the past distinguished between RAF aircraft based in the United Kingdom and those based elsewhere, including the Federal Republic of Germany. The information requested is not therefore available.

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the land area of Scotland is included within the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Freeman: The whole of the land area of Scotland is included within the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Forward Air Control Exercise

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent local press and hon. Members will be informed about the Forward Air Control exercise to be held in the Elan valley, Powys, from 11 to 13 May.

Mr. Freeman: It is normal practice to provide hon. Members with advance notice of any major exercise that is likely to have a significant effect on low-flying activity in their constituencies. The Press Association, local papers and local TV and radio stations are similarly informed about major exercises. Notification is not, however, given for all small exercises, such as the Forward Air Control exercise referred to, although this exercise may be mentioned in the formal notification concerning the annual OSEX exercise, to which it relates.

Fast Jet Operational Training Programme

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which elements of the Royal Air Force fast jet operational training programme were considered by the 1985 Gibson report.

Mr. Freeman: The report considered the pattern, content and duration of Royal Air Force fast jet operational flying training following completion of advanced flying training.

US Military Personnel (Arrests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has to the power under which United States military personnel claim to have acted in effecting arrests at (a) United States bases, (b) training areas in use by United States forces and (c) any other areas, over the last five years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The powers of arrest of United States military personnel in the United Kingdom are the same as those of an ordinary British citizen.

Air Staff Requirement 1584

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the requirements set out in air staff requirement 1584.

Mr. Sainsbury: Air staff requirement 1584 concerns the provision of new sensors for the identification and location of airborne radars as part of the improved air defence ground environment.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether right hon. and hon. Members will be invited to attend the British Army equipment exhibition to be held in Aldershot from 27 June to 1 July.

Mr. Freeman: A number of right hon. and hon. Members have been invited to attend the British Army equipment exhibition on 28 June as the guests of the Ministry of Defence.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the number of National Health Service patients treated as (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients at Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, during the last 12 months for which figures are available together with comparative figures for the preceding five years.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of NHS patients, including dependants, treated at the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, in 1987 and the preceding four years are as follows:

Inpatients	4,788	5,693	6,500	6,070	6,042
Day Patients	220	833	991	781	1,287
Outpatients	4,725	4,787	5,953	4,977	4,767

Notes:

1. The out-patient numbers represent individual new cases and do not include follow up appointments.
2. The comparable figures for 1982 and the preceding years are not yet readily available.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the rôle of the Armilla patrol of United States plans to broaden the scope of its rôle in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The policy for the Armilla patrol is kept under constant review in the light of all relevant factors. Any change in the operating pattern of a friendly navy would, of course, be taken fully into account.

Exercise Elder Forest

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the results of the recent Exercise Elder Forest.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Elder Forest 1988 was the latest in a biennial series of exercises the purpose of which is to test procedures for the air defence of the United Kingdom. The exercise took place from 18 to 22 April. A full assessment of the lessons learned is in hand, but will take some time to complete. Initial indications are that the exercise was successful in meeting its aims.

United States Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation procedures are currently in force regarding military action by United States forces based in the United Kingdom; if he has received any requests from the United States Government for the use of bases in the United Kingdom for possible military action in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Churchill/Truman understanding of 1952 reaffirmed that the use of United States basis in the United Kingdom in an emergency would be a matter for joint decision by Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time. Appropriate arrangements exist to cover both conventional and nuclear United States forces, whether under national or NATO command. These arrangements are classified. It is not our usual practice to comment on any discussions between the United States and United Kingdom Governments about the details of operational plans.

360 Squadron RAF

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to privatise the electronic countermeasures training role currently carried out by No. 360 Squadron RAF.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to privatise the task of No. 360 squadron RAF.

The MoD will, however, in the normal way, continue to keep under review the most cost-effective way of meeting this requirement.

100 Squadron RAF

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to privatise the target facilities functions carried out by No. 100 Squadron RAF.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to privatise the task of No. 100 squadron RAF.

The MOD will, however, in the normal way, continue to keep under review the most cost-effective way of meetting this requirement.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his statement of 25 April, Official Report, columns 21-22, for what reasons Her Majesty's Government declared production offtake of the new European fighter aircraft was set at a figure of 250; and what are the comparable offtakes set out by the other participant nations

Mr. Sainsbury: Each of the partner nations declared its projected production offtake in 1985 on the basis of its perceived needs. These declared offtakes and the development workshares for which they formed the basis remain unchanged as follows:

	Number of aircraft	Percentage
United Kingdom	250	33
Federal Republic of Germany	250	33

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his statement of 25 April, Official Report, columns 21-22, whether the actual expenses incurred by the European fighter aircraft development programme will be made public; and whether the United Kingdom financial liability will relate only to the work contracted for by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of United Kingdom expenditure on the development of the European fighter aircraft will be made available to Committees of the House in the normal way, but any consideration of wider publication would need to take account of our obligations to our international partners. Contracts will be let on behalf of the participating nations by NEFMA (the Eurofighter management agency) on the two prime contractors, Eurofighter Jagdflugzeug GmbH and Eurojet Turbo GmbH, at the request of the four participating nations. In the context of the agreements among the four nations, the United Kingdom will have a financial liability within the terms of the prime contracts for the United Kingdom's workshare. The United Kingdom will in addition have a financial liability to fund a 33 per cent. share of the international administrative costs of the programme.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a decision has yet been made on the organisation or body which will determine the sale price of the European fighter aircraft offered for sale abroad in the event of the project proceeding to production.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. It would be premature at this stage to reach a decision on the price of EFA for export. We are confident, however, that EFA will prove to be very attractive to potential customers.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a decision has yet been made on the location of the headquarters of the Eurofighter consortium; what will be the legal structure of that organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The corporate headquarters of Eurofighter Jagdflugzeug GmbH has been established at Munich since 1986. It is there colocated with the international government management agency (NEFMA). Eurofighter is wholly owned by the partner aircraft companies (British Aerospace, Messerschmitt-Bolkow-Blohm, Aeritalia, Construcciones Aeronauticas) of the four nations, and will be the prime contractor responsible for the whole weapon system including integration of the avionics and the engine system.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he proposes in his defence programme to accommodate the £1·7 billion development cost of the European fighter aircraft development within the planned expenditure totals published last autumn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: When the public expenditure totals for defence were set last autumn, the probable need was already recognised to provide for the development cost of EFA. Only a small proportion of the total development cost falls within the public expenditure planning period. We do not, therefore, propose to make changes to the defence programme for those years as a result of the decision which my right hon. Friend announced on 25 April. The period of highest expenditure on EFA is expected to be around the turn of the century, but the defence programme for those years is, of course, at only a preliminary planning stage and will be shaped reflecting the priority accorded to EFA.

Gulf War

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has reassessed the likelihood of the loss through (a) mines or (b) missiles of a major ship in the Gulf, in the light of the incident involving the USS Samuel Roberts.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety of British minesweepers in the light of recent military action in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The likely threat to Royal Navy ships serving in the Gulf area is kept under constant review in the light both of general circumstances and of particular incidents. Although there is, of course, always some risk inherent in the Armilla patrol's duties, the ships have self-defence equipment relevant to the range of threats in the region. No Royal Navy ship was involved in the recent military action between United States and Iranian forces in the Gulf and Armilla's non-provocative and de-escalatory operating pattern is designed to minimise the risk of conflict at any time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pass Holders

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list by name all those persons currently employed by right hon. and hon. Members on a permanent or temporary basis, showing by which right hon. or hon. Member they are employed and indicating which persons possess passes entitling them to access to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not possible to provide this information, since it is not the practice, on security grounds, to make public the names of individual Palace of Westminster photo-identity pass holders.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on below the line redundancy costs as a result of hospital domestic services privatisation.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 31 March, at column 660. No further information is held centrally.

Rampton Special Hospital

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the capital expenditure on Rampton special hospital for each year since 1980; and what is the planned future capital expenditure.

Mr. Newton: Major and minor capital expenditure combined was as follows:

Financial year	£000
1980-81	972
1981-82	350
1982-83	294
1983-84	935
1984-85	1,891
1985-86	378
1987-88	1,250

Future major capital expenditure planned for the current financial year up to and including 1992-93 is £17·26 million. Provision for minor capital expenditure will be determined annually from within the resources available for the special hospitals service.

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to provide for an element of direct central funding of teaching hospitals.

Mr. Newton: The additional service costs associated with providing teaching facilities are already protected through the service increment for teaching (SIFT) which is distributed in relation to the numbers of medical students in each region.

SIFT along with other aspects of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula is currently under review. Any recommendations which may emerge will be carefully considered.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what courses are available for nurses and midwives to undertake further training to improve the scope and standard of their skills.

Mr. Newton: The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has issued outline curricula for 106 post-basic clinical courses, designed to enhance the scope and standard of skills of nurses and midwives. These courses cover clinical nursing skills, work with particular client groups, or research. Most are available at more than one centre throughout the country.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the English national board for further information.

In addition, schemes are available through the NHS training authority to assist nurses and midwives who wish to obtain a first degree in a subject relevant to their work and career aspirations and for those who wish to train for general management in the NHS. There are also a variety of management development programmes to assist nurses in their careers.

Hospitals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the recommended staffing levels by patient category in hospitals; and what are the current staffing levels listed by each health authority.

Mr. Newton: Staffing levels for particular patient categories are a matter for local decision. For current staff in post figures, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 31 March, at columns 665-69.

Alarm Systems

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will investigate the cost-effectiveness of a national centrally funded scheme of meeting the charges necessary to upgrade domestic telephone sockets to enable elderly residents to have house alarm systems installed by local authorities where that provision would enable them to live in the community and not in institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The supply of emergency alarms is a matter for local authorities, which would no doubt approach British Telecom in suitable circumstances.

Pathology

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Management Advisory Service report on pathology staffing will be published.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the Management Advisory Services' report on pathology staffing in England;

(2) when he expects publication of the Management Advisory Services' report on pathology staffing in England.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) and for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), and to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 28 March 1988, at column 336.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average percentage payment to recipients of the vibration white finger prescribed industrial disease benefit.

Mr. Scott: Average payments for vibration white finger on claims made since 1 October 1986 have been at the 30 per cent. rate (currently £20·16 per week). Since that date disablement benefit has not generally been payable where disablement is assessed at less than 14 per cent.

Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in which National Health Service regions consultants' contracts are held at regional and district level, respectively; and if he will list the districts which hold consultant contracts;

(2) how many National Health Service consultants' contracts are held at regional and district levels, respectively; and what criteria determine whether contracts are held by district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: With the exception of teaching districts, consultants' contracts in England are held by regional health authorities. The teaching districts are listed as follows:

Newcastle
Leeds Western Leeds Eastern Leicestershire
Nottingham
Sheffield
Cambridge
Parkside
Riverside
Hampstead
Bloomsbury
City and Hackney
Tower Hamlets
West Lambeth
Camberwell
Lewisham and North Southwark
Wandsworth
Southampton and South West Hampshire
Oxfordshire
Bristol and Weston
Central Birmingham
Liverpool
Central Manchester
South Manchester
Salford

Social Workers (Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has in relation to the number of social workers and medical staff who have been vetted by police before they are employed in jobs where they work with children; and whether his Department keeps information as to the number of people refused employment and the reasons therefor.

Mr. Newton: This information is not collected by the Department. Such information as is available is collected by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Benefits (Advertising)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department is spending on (a) advertising as a whole and (b) television advertising to publicise the changes in the social security benefit system; and if he will give a breakdown on the spending in relation to each main such change.

Mr. Portillo: A breakdown of the costs incurred so far on advertising is as follows:

	Spent July 1986-May 1988
	(a) Total £	(b) Television £
General reform advertising	270,650	—

In 1988-89 we plan to spend a further £4 million, mainly on pensions and family credit advertising. Approximately half of this will be spent on television.

Free Milk

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what change he expects there to be in the numbers of families eligible for free milk on the implementation of clause 11 of the Social Security Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: At the latest date for which information is available (February 1986) around 786,000 families were entitled to free welfare milk because they were receiving supplementary benefit or family income supplement, or were claiming under the low-income scheme. Following the changes introduced earlier this month by regulations made under the Social Security Act 1988, families receiving income support (about 633,000 on the basis of the numbers previously receiving supplemenary benefit) will still be entitled to free welfare milk. In family credit, provision is made in cash instead, by including an additional amount of £2·55 in the child credit rates for each child. The low-income scheme has been abolished. On the basis of the estimates in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" (October 1987) over 100,000 more children under five will receive the cash addition in family credit than were previously entitled to free welfare milk through receipt of family income supplement or under the low-income scheme.

Eye Tests (Pontefract)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the Pontefract area health authority had eye tests in the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate he can make of how many would not have received free tests if his Department's new regulations had applied at the time.

Mr. Newton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to eye tests carried out under the general ophthalmic services. These are the responsibility of the family practitioner committee and it is not possible to give information for particular health authority areas. However, the figures for the Wakefield FPC, which includes the area covered by the Pontefract district health authority, were 68,449 for the year ended 31 December 1987. The provisions of the Health and Medicines Bill would confine NHS eye tests to children under 16, full time students under 19, the registered blind and partially sighted, people on low incomes and those with diabetes or glaucoma who are referred by the doctor managing their condition. It is estimated these groups account for a little over one third of eye tests.

Listeria Monocytogenes

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if (a) his Department and (b) the Yorkshire regional health authority will be represented at the international conference on the human pathogen listeria monocytogenes in Hungary in August;

(2) by whom his Department was represented at the international conference on 1 March at Leatherhead on the human pathogen listeria monocytogenes.

Mrs. Currie: The Department was represented by an environmental health officer at the conference "Listeria and its Implications for Food Safety" held on March 1 at the Leatherhead Food Research Association. There are no plans at present for the Department to be represented at the international conference to be held in Pesc, Hungary from 22 to 26 August 1988. Yorkshire regional health authority representation is a matter for that authority to decide. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the RHA chairman, Mr. Bryan Askew, for details.

Brook Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to complete his consideration of the proposal to transfer the neuro-sciences unit from the Brook hospital, Woolwich; and if he is yet able to indicate when he plans to visit the hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Either my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health will visit the Brook hospital and the proposed site of the new centre at the Maudsley hospital, before a final decision is made. It is hoped to make this visit within the next two months.

Cook-chill System

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what scientific evaluation of the cook-chill system has been carried out by his Department or any other relevant organisation;

(2) if he will conduct a full inquiry into the cost and safety aspects of the cook-chill system.

Mrs. Currie: Cook-chill is a long established method of preparing food in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. As with any technically sophisticated system, safety rests on the strict application of procedures and principles developed over time. In the United Kingdom, these are described in the Department's "Guidelines on pre-cooked chilled foods" published in 1980, which have been reviewed and updated by an expert working group. The new edition will be published shortly. The review included consideration of scientific data from both long-established and more recently established cook-chill units and took account of relevant published scientific papers. The guidelines will be kept under review.

Decisions to introduce cook-chill are taken by commercial or institutional managers in the light of local catering needs. The design of each system, including its cost effectiveness, must relate to those needs.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the provisions relating to food hygiene circulated in a letter in January from Mr. David Thompson, head of catering, to all regional and district health authority general managers requiring that local environental health officers, control of infection officers, medical officers of environmental health and local medical microbiologists or public health laboratories are consulted before the introduction of cook-chill catering systems have been met by health authorities in the Yorkshire region; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities determine their own catering strategies and pattern of delivery within the framework of broad guidelines and management principles issued centrally. Information is not routinely collected on the manner in which health authorities use this guidance and the hon. Member should consult the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority on the practices adopted in that region.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the £4 billion increase in real terms in social security expenditure over the period 1978-79 to 1987-88 was accounted for by increases or offsetting decreases in real terms in the average amounts of benefit paid, for each of the benefits listed in table 15.1 of Cm. 288-II; and what was the year-on-year increase.

Mr. Scott: The estimated increase in real terms in social security expenditure over the period 1978-79 to 1987-88 is £13 billion. An analysis of the £4 billion increase over that period caused by increases in the average amounts of benefits paid cannot be provided in precisely the form requested, but the available information is set out in the table. Further analysis showing year-on-year increases could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Analysis of real changes in average amount of benefit paid[1] Great Britain

Retirement Pension	1,330
Christmas Bonus	(120)
Widow's Benefit	50
Unemployment Benefit	(360)
Sickness Benefit	(60)
Invalidity Benefit	160

Supplementary Benefit & Certificated Housing Benefit[2,3]	840
Standard Housing Benefit	420
Child Benefit[4]	1,380
One Parent Benefit	60
Family Income Supplement	50
Maternity Grant	(30)

[1] Benefits where the change has an effect of less than £10 million have been excluded. Figures in brackets ( ) refer to decreases.

[2] Housing benefit is rent rebate and rent allowance. Rate rebates are excluded as they are not classified as public expenditure.

[3] Certificated housing benefit has been added to supplementary benefit to ensure a consistent basis for the comparison. The supplementary benefit figure for 1978-79 included the housing costs of supplementary benefit recipients.

[4] The increase is based on an analysis of public expenditure only and takes no account of tax allowance available in 1978-79.

Nurses

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures the Government are taking to ensure that there are adequate staff in specialties, including geriatrics and psychogeriatrics, where pay increases will be between 4 and 6 per cent.

Mr. Newton: The Government share the view of the Nurses' Pay Review Body that the new clinical structure offers an outstanding opportunity to improve the attractions of nursing as a career and that it will play an important part in improving recruitment and retention. Nurses in geriatric and psychogeriatrics stand to benefit from the new structure and from this year's average pay award of 15·3 per cent. and many working in these specialties will receive pay increases significantly in excess of 6 per cent.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to local authorities with regard to the implementation of the Data Protection Act within local authority social services departments.

Mrs. Currie: In September 1987 we issued to all local authorities circular LAC(87)10, a copy of which is in the Library. This gave guidance on the limitations to an individual's right of access to personal information laid down in the social work order made under the Act. Guidance on the rights of children and parents under the Act is in preparation. Guidance generally on the operation of the Act has been issued by the Data Protection Registrar.

Juvenile Offenders (Supervision)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take following the publication of his Department's report on the practice of supervision of juvenile offenders.

Mrs. Currie: This report was the result of a joint inspection by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation and the inspectorate of social services on practice and supervision of juvenile offenders in two non-metropolitan counties in England. The inspection was designed to obtain information about the effectiveness of the supervision order; to assist those agencies involved in the inspection of the future development of their services; and to provide material to assist other social services departments and probation services in their work.

The report was drawn to the attention of directors of social services by the chief inspector of the social services inspectorate on 16 December 1987. In doing so he highlighted a number of matters of concern both in the treatment of young offenders and in maintaining the confidence of courts in making supervision orders to reduce the numbers sentenced to custody, and drew attention to the recommendations related to these points included in the report. Copies of the report were sent also to the relevant local authority and professional associations.

The social services inspectorate continues to follow-up the implications of the inspection report in discussions with the two local authorities who participated in the study. The Department will continue to draw on the conclusions and recommendations in the report in considering future policy on supervision orders for juvenile offenders.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to maintain the level of child benefit payments in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 12 April, at column 86.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to promote the publication in local newspapers of information on individual consultants' waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As part of the waiting list initiative we are encouraging district health authorities to make information about in and out-patient waiting times more widely available to general practitioners and the general public. It is for each health authority to decide how this may best be achieved.

Income Support

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes changes to the income support scheme in the light of his announcement of 27 April.

Mr. Scott: In addition to the more flexible approach to the treatment of property as capital which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced yesterday, we propose making three other small changes to the rules governing the income related benefits.

We will provide transitional protection for disabled people, lone parents and pensioners who were receiving supplementary benefit but who are not entitled to income support because of changes in the rules relating to full-time work.

Secondly, we will also provide that certain young people in full-time education who lost their benefit on 11 April because they were over 19 years old will get protection. Both these groups of people will be able to look for this special help to the new central unit, announced yesterday.

Thirdly, we intend to give additional protection to certain small groups who were temporarily away from home during the week before 11 April. We have in mind, for example, people who were temporarily in hospital or respite care and those who were abroad getting medical treatment. This extra help will be provided through the income support scheme.

These additional minor changes will be introduced as soon as practicable and will target help to particularly vulnerable groups. Procedures for claiming these new forms of transitional protection will be announced shortly.

Chiropody

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody service;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody profession;

(3) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody profession;

(4) when he intends to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East on the future of chiropody services in January and Februrary; and if he will give the reasons for the delay.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 22 April 1988, c. 596]: The Cartwright report, "More Trouble with Feet", pointed to the need to improve chiropody services for the elderly. We have concluded that a number of recommendations in the report should be implemented and we propose discussing with the chiropody profession and other interested bodies how this might be achieved.

These discussions are likely to cover the wider use of foot care assistants, encouraging more contractual and sessional arrangements with private chiropodists, and the place which chiropodists might play in primary care teams in the future, as suggested in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health".

Michael Forsyth Ltd.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all contacts by (a) Ministers in his Department and (b) civil servants in his Department with representatives of Michael Forsyth Ltd; Michael Forsyth Associates and subsidiaries thereof, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1988, c. 545-46]: I have today attended the Pensions Journalist of the Year lunch arranged by Michael Forsyth Limited, acting on behalf of the Alexander Consultants Group.

Mental Handicap Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to publish advice to local services on issues of common concern for people with mental handicaps, relating to the integration of people with additional needs such as challenging behaviour and people with (i) mental handicaps and (ii) mental illness.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 March 1988]: The Department's paper[1] "Mental Handicap: policies and priorities" draws attention to the need to identify mentally handicapped people with special needs and to plan services to meet them. "Helping Mentally Handicapped People with Special Problems", the report of a departmental study team, was published in 1984[2]. It covered special needs such as multiple and sensory handicaps and behaviour disturbance in severely mentally handicapped people. In recognition of the special needs of mentally handicapped people who are also mentally ill or behaviourally disturbed, a departmental team has undertaken a programme of visits and discussions with people who are currently providing or planning services to respond to the needs of these individuals. The Department is now considering how best to share information about services and facilities. We are also sponsoring a number of relevant research studies which it is hoped will help health and local authorities to plan services.

Labour Statistics (Castleford)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unemployed persons over the age of 50 years and out of work for more than one year, broken down by sex, there are in the Castleford travel-to-work area.[1]

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 14 January 1988 there were 1,280 male and 186 female unemployed claimants aged over 50 years who had been unemployed for one year or more in the Castleford and Pontefract travel-to-work area.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chickens

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions in respect of unnecessary pain or distress caused to broiler and battery chickens in each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of prosecutions undertaken and convictions obtained by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of causing unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress to poultry in England within the last five years is as follows:

Year	Prosecutions	Convictions
1985	Nil	Nil

Pigs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve the marketing of pigs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government support the action being taken by the Meat and Livestock Commission and Food From Britain to improve the marketing of British meat, including pigmeat. Assistance is also available for the improvement of pig processing facilities under EC regulations 355/77.

Cows

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase the premium payable on suckler cows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We increased the suckler cow premium by £8·66 to £33·40 for the 1987-88 scheme year. The period for applications under the 1988-89 scheme cannot begin before 15 June and the arrangements to apply in that year will be announced nearer the time.

Beef Variable Premium

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the retention of the beef variable premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received representations from producers which point to the value of the beef variable premium scheme. Those involved in the meat trade, particularly those exporting beef, have pointed to the disadvantages which the BVPS has for them because of the clawback on exports. The retention of the BVPS until the end of this year was an important feature of the settlement in December 1986. We shall be negotiating later this year on the arrangements for 1989.

Bovine Spongiform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding the extent of bovine spongiform throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As at 22 April, 430 cases of BSE had been confirmed on 359 farms in Great Britain.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department will provide more information to farmers and veterinarians about the disease bovine spongiform.

Mr. Donald Thompson: All the known facts about bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) have been made available to the veterinary profession, the farming industry and the specialist media.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines his Department intends to give to farmers and veterinarians on the problem of bovine spongiform.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Advice, based on the current state of knowledge about the disease, is being provided, particularly through the Ministry's veterinary investigaton centres. There have also been a number of Ministry scientific presentations, publications and general articles on the subject including one, giving the latest advice, which will appear in this week's Veterinary Record.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce a decision on the future of research and development in agriculture, fisheries and food in the light of the finalisation of the Barnes review.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 25 April at column 43.

Foodstuffs (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to the answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 155, he will list (a) the maximum permitted levels of radioactive caesium in foodstuffs for Malaysia and the Philippines operated after April 1986, (b) how many consignments of milk powder were rejected (i) from the European Community and (ii) from the United Kingdom, (c) the volume or weight of these rejected consignments and (d) what happened to each rejected consignment.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I understand that the maximum permitted radiocaesium levels in feedstuffs operated by Malaysia and the Philippines after April 1986 are as follows:

Malaysia

I repeat the statement I made in replying to the previous question on this subject on 13 April at column 155. I am fully satisfied that these feedstuffs posed no risk to public health.

NATIONAL FINANCE

War Loan

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the register of those holding 3½ per cent. war loan is computerised.

Mr. Lilley: The 3½ per cent. war loan is held on four registers; at the Bank of England, the Bank of Ireland in Belfast and Dublin, and on the national savings stock register. All of these registers are now held on computer, but the computerised registers do not show changes in ownership of war loan prior to computerisation.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates to be the average percentage effect of the rise from 140 to 187 in the sterling-dollar exchange rate, on the income received for manufactured goods exported from Britain to the United States of America in the last quarter of 1987 and the first quarter of 1988.

Mr. Major: The effect of exchange rate changes on the value of exports depends on a number of factors and is difficult to separate from other determinants of trade performance. In the three months to February 1988—the latest period for which published figures are available—the value of total exports of goods to the United States was 2½ per cent. higher than in the previous three months.

Consumer Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of consumer expenditure in each of the last five years on (a) books, (b) records and audio tapes, (c) video tapes, (d) cinema, (e) theatre, (f) live arts, (g) newspapers and periodicals, (h) restaurants, (i) alcoholic drinks, (j) sport and (k) leisure.

Mr. Major [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Not all the categories of expenditure mentioned in the question are separately distinguished in the consumers' expenditure estimates compiled and published by the Central Statistical Office. The table gives figures of consumers' expenditure as closely as possible with the categories requested. A detailed breakdown of consumers' expenditure is published annually in the United Kingdom National Accounts (the CSO Blue Book). An even finer level of breakdown is shown in an analysis available on subscription from the Central Statistical Office. This is the source of the figures given in this answer and I am arranging to have the latest version of the analysis placed in the House of Commons Library.

CIVIL SERVICE

Photocopying Machines

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many photocopying machines there are within the Civil Service; and how many are fitted with a user code requirement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Civil Service Departments are no longer required to obtain all their photocopiers through Her Majesty's Stationery Office, but HMSO estimates that there are about 25,000 photocopiers in the Civil Service, of which around 1,000 are fitted with user code devices.

Tea Ladies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many tea ladies are employed in the Civil Service; and what steps are being taken to provide refreshment machines.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The Civil Service does not employ tea ladies. Refreshment machines are provided where these are cost-effective and where funds permit.

THE ARTS

Ethnic Minority Arts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much the Arts Council has spent on (a) Afro-Caribbean and Asian arts and (b) other ethnic minorities in each financial year since its ethnic minority action plan was launched; and what percentage of its total budget this represents in each year.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council's spending on ethnic minority arts was £960,166 in 1986-87 and £1,024,178 in 1987-88.

This figure covers only the council's direct expenditure in England and does not include expenditure by the regional arts associations, Scottish and Welsh Arts Council programmes, activities promoted by client organisations of the Arts Council and visiting arts expenditure, in respect of which an ethnic breakdown is not held centrally.

A report on ethnic minority arts will be published by the council later this year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report all the individuals and organisations which benefited from the Arts Council's expenditure on (a) Afro-Caribbean Arts and (b) other ethnic minorities, and the sums by which they benefited in the years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: The information requested as it relates to the Arts Council's direct expenditure in England, is as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Generation

3. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the future generation of electricity in Northern Ireland.

23. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the future generation of electricity in Northern Ireland.

29. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the future generation of electricity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The results of an investment appraisal of the proposals for the next phase of generating capacity submitted by Northern Ireland Electricity and the Antrim Power Company Limited are currently being considered. Decisions will be taken as soon as possible.

Health and Social Services

8. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current level of funding for health and social services in the Province.

Mr. Needham: Total funding for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland in 1988-89 will amount to £873 million—equivalent to over £557 per head of the population.

Social Security

11. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the effects of the social security changes in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the effects of the social security changes in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

32. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the effects of the social security changes in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Representations concerning the effects have been made by some district councils, some voluntary bodies and some Members of this House. The effects will generally be the same as in Great Britain and the additional transitional protection and other helpful measures announced yesterday by my right hon. Friend will apply in Northern Ireland as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Integrated Education

12. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding assistance other than capital moneys, his Department intends to target towards integrated maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government's present proposal to facilitate the establishment of grant-maintained integrated schools includes 100 per cent. funding direct from the Department of Education for Northern Ireland. Recurrent grants would include special purpose grants to take account of special needs arising in particular circumstances.

Economic Activity (West Belfast)

13. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to promote economic activity in west Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

21. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to promote economic activity in west Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to promote economic activity in west Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: We are most anxious to see an improvement in economic activity in west Belfast, and we are considering urgently what additional practical steps we might take to promote it. Success, however, will not be achieved by the efforts of Government alone; the private and voluntary sectors must have a major role. The biggest single boost to the prospects of the area would come from the renunciation of violence which is a major obstacle to achieving better prospects for all who live there.

Security

14. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on security in Northern Ireland.

15. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest security situation in Northern Ireland.

24. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

26. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security position.

31. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation in Northern Ireland.

33. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley).

Health Service

16. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about his plans for the Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend's long-term strategy for the health and personal social services remains as set out in the regional strategy which was published in August 1987.

I will shortly be meeting the chairman of each of the four health and social services boards at accountability reviews at which one of my aims will be to consider and agree with them on detailed plans for 1988-89.

25. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next intends to meet the chairmen of the Province's health and social services boards to discuss the level of health provision in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I will shortly be meeting each board chairman at the annual accountability review. These meetings will concentrate largely on the revised operational plans for 1988-89 submitted by the boards and I shall agree with each chairman plans and objectives for the coming year. These will aim to continue progress with the regional strategy within the level of resources now made available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next intends to meet the chairmen of the Province's area health and social services boards to discuss the level of health provision in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I will shortly be meeting the chairman of each board at the annual round of accountability reviews.

Disabled Persons

17. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received relating to legislation concerning disabled persons in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Member, two other hon. Members, and the Northern Ireland Council on Disability, have made representations regarding the application to Northern Ireland of the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 affecting disabled persons.

Regional Council

18. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to set up a regional council in Northern Ireland, with widely developed powers over local matters.

Mr. Tom King: No, but in the present discussions I am prepared to listen to all constructive proposals that can command a broad measure of support and could genuinely provide a greater degree of involvement and responsibility for people in Northern Ireland.

House Building

19. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to discuss the level of house building; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to discuss the level of house building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Secretary of State and I met the chairman and members of the board of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on 16 March 1988. We discussed the planned level of funding for the housing programme and the associated levels of physical activity, including new housebuilding.

Sentences (Remission)

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the policy of granting remission of sentences.

Mr. Stanley: In accordance with rule 26 of the Prison Rules (Northern Ireland) 1982, all prisoners serving fixed-term sentences of more than five days are awarded remission of 50 per cent. of their sentences. Periods of remission can be lost for offences against prison discipline, up to a maximum of 180 days for each offence. Those serving sentences of more than one year who are released with remission may, if convicted of a further imprisonable offence during the period until their sentence would (but for remission) have expired, be obliged by a court to serve the remainder of that period either concurrently or consecutively with their further sentence. This power is available only in Northern Ireland and not in the rest of the United Kingdom. Northern Ireland does not, however have any parole system.

Catholic Hierarchy (Meetings)

22. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet representatives of the Catholic hierarchy of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I have no meeting immediately planned, but I and my ministerial colleagues maintain regular contact with a range of Church and community leaders. I last met Cardinal O'Fiaich, together with other Church leaders, on 21 March.

Political Parties (Talks)

27. Mr Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has held recently with the political parties in Northern Ireland on constitutional proposals for the Province.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison).

Equal Opportunities

30. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received any representations from the United States of America concerning the Government's proposals to promote equality of opportunity in employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend received one written submission from an organisation in the United States of America, in response to the Government's consultative paper on equality of opportunity. American public representatives and business men have also expressed views on equality of opportunity directly to the Secretary of State and to ministerial colleagues. A White Paper on the Goverment's new proposals on fair employment is now being prepared with a view to publication in late spring.

38. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ask the Fair Employment Agency to advise him with regard to an affirmative action programme for his Department to rectify the imbalances in employment opportunities in that office as highlighted by the reports of the equal opportunities unit for the Northern Ireland Civil Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The equal opportunities unit for the Northern Ireland Civil Service is already in touch with both the Fair Employment Agency and the Equal Opportunities Commission over the development of its monitoring role. The unit's method of operation and its future work programme were set out in reports published in July 1986 and December 1987.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received any representations from the United States of America concerning the Government's proposals to promote equality of opportunity in employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend received one written submission from an organisation in the United States of America, in response to the Government's consultative paper on equality of opportunity and a number of American public representatives and business men have also expressed views directly to my right hon. Friend and to ministerial colleagues.

Aerosols

34. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols in his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: There are no proposals to ban the use of aerosols in my Department's buildings.

Unlawful Killings

35. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the trend of unlawful killings in Northern Ireland both connected and unconnected with the security situation; and what was the trend in the period before the death penalty was removed in the Province.

Mr. Stanley: In line with legislation in Great Britain the death sentence was removed from the statute books in Northern Ireland on 6 August 1966 in respect of ordinary crime. However, it was retained in the Province

"for the murder of a policeman or person in the Service of the Crown acting in the course of any duty involving the enforcement of the law" until 8 August 1973.

Only convictions for murder and not unlawful killing (manslaughter) could have resulted in the death penalty being imposed. The following table therefore shows the numbers of all murders committed in Northern Ireland during the period 1960 to 1987 (connected and unconnected with the security situation).

Constitutional Reform

37. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about progress towards creating a form of democratic administration in the Province.

Mr. Tom King: The Government believe that elected representatives should be more fully involved in decision-making. I have therefore been seeking to bring about a constructive dialogue between the constitutional political parties about the future government of Northern Ireland. These efforts are continuing.

Rating Reform

39. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer of 10 December 1987, Official Report, column 566, for how long he intends to monitor the operation of the community charge in Great Britain before reaching conclusions about its applicability to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot be specific about the duration of the monitoring process. It depends upon what emerges from the process and its evaluation in the light of local circumstances in Northern Ireland.

Economic Prospects

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet trades union representatives in Northern Ireland to discuss economic prospects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 27 April 1988]: My right hon. Friend and I have no outstanding arrangements to meet trades union representatives, though we have met them on a number of occasions in the past to discuss economic prospects and other issues. We value these meetings.

Fourth College, Belfast

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current position regarding the provision of a fourth college in Belfast; and if a suitable site has yet been identified in a non-sectarian part of the city.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The provision of further education facilities in Belfast is a matter for the Belfast education and library board. I understand that a working party of the board is presently examining further education provision in Belfast but no conclusions have yet been reached.

Consultants (Patient Referral)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the length of time between a patient being referred to a consultant for an appointment by general practitioners and the patient actually seeing a consultant; and if he will publish this information for each area board and by specialty for the last five years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 April 1988]: This information is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish out-patient waiting lists for the last five years for each area board by specialty broken down by length of time on the waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 April 1988]: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

ENVIRONMENT

East London (Housing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what type of housing is envisaged for the five areas of new housing in east London announced on 20 April; how many will be for sale and how many for rent; under whose auspices the development will take place; what total amount of expenditure is envisaged; who will be responsible for funding; and what is the anticipated time scale from commissioning of consultants' reports and the commencement of the first construction.

Mr. Waldegrave: A mix of housing in the five areas is envisaged. It is too early to comment on the nature of that mix, which will depend on planning and other considerations. Similarly it is premature to comment on the other matters raised by the hon. Member as these will be amongst the topics covered by the appointed consultant.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations took place between his Department and the London boroughs involved before he made his announcement on the consultancy studies of the prospects for new housing on five sites in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No special consultations took place between the Department and the London boroughs involved. The Department keeps in general contact with all London boroughs.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the leader of Newham council was notified of his announcement of consultancy studies of the prospect for new housing in five areas in east London; and when the original announcement was made.

Mr. Waldegrave: I wrote to the leader of Newham council on 21 April, the day following my announcement.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) of 20 April, Official Report, column 825, he will involve the London boroughs concerned with the work to be undertaken by the consultants commissioned to carry out studies on the five sites for housing development in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is intended to involve the London boroughs concerned as appropriate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) of 20 April, Official Report, column 825, what is the consultancy fee allowed for in the study of the five sites for housing identified in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The commission will be let by competitive tender so no fee has yet been determined.

General Development Order

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposal to amend and consolidate the General Development Order 1977.

Mr. Waldegrave: I gave details of our proposals to amend and consolidate the GDO in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) on 4 February 1988, Official Report, columns 711-12. We are now considering comments received in response to the consultation paper we issued that day. We expect to make the new order later this year.

Households

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he or his officials have yet held a meeting with members of the South East Regional Planning Conference to consider the new projections of household numbers to 2001; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend expects to meet members of the conference for this purpose soon.

Sunday Sports

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many major spectator sporting events were held on Sundays in 1987; and if he will list them.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, for each London borough, for each year since 1980-81, (a) total HIP expenditure (outturn); (b) HIP expenditure funded by capital receipts.

Mrs. Roe [pursuant to her reply 26 April 1988 c. 137-8]: The information requested is shown in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Racial Harassment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by local education authority in England and Wales, the latest figures on racial harassment in school; and if he will make a statement on what guidelines his Department has issued to education authorities on racial harassment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Statistical information on incidents of racial harassment in schools is not collected centrally.

Advice on dealing with racial harassment was issued in October 1983 in the form of a paper published by HM inspectorate, on "Race Relations in Schools". The paper was based on detailed discussions with a number of urban and county LEAs. Copies were sent to all chief education officers and all teacher-training institutions. The paper identified a range of actions which schools might take to encourage good race relations. HMI continue, in the course of their regular visits and formal inspections, to offer advice and guidance on good practice.

Computer Courses (Women)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will express the number of women (a) applying for and (b) starting computer courses at universities and polytechnics over the past five years as a percentage of all domestic applicants and starters; if he will take steps to promote (i) more such courses and (ii) a higher proportion of women students in such courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures for applicants are available only for the universities. They are:

Women as Proportion of All Applicants for Courses in Computing[1]

	Percentages
1982	22·9
1983	20·3
1984	18·2
1985	16·0
1986	15·4
1987	15·1

[1] There was a change in the basis of subject coding for universities in 1985.

Figures for the numbers of students starting computing courses and the proportion who were women are:

	Universities in the United Kingdom[1]		Polytechnics in England
	UCCA acceptances	Percentage of females	New enrolments[2]	Percentage of females
1982	1,901	21·7	2,170	22·9
1983	1,935	19·7	2,955	19·9
1984	2,070	16·5	3,205	17·4
1985	2,214	16·4	3,841	17·9
1986	2,276	16·1	4,595	17·1

[1] There was a change in the basis of subject coding for universities in 1985.
[2] Full-time equivalent.

The information shows that there has been a substantial increase in overall enrolments on computing courses in recent years, reflecting demand from students and the priority which institutions and the funding bodies have given them.

The numbers of women taking these courses are increasing, though more slowly than the numbers of men. Policy on student admissions is for the institutions themselves, within the law as it relates to sex discrimination. The Government's policy for the national curriculum is in part intended to counter premature specialisation in schools and to increase the number of girls who have the grounding in mathematics and kindred subjects which will enable them to study for the qualifications which admit to courses of higher education such as computing.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the per capita spending on education in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) West Germany, (iii) the United States of America and (iv) Japan.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information on current public expenditure on education per capita is given in the table:

Country	Year of data	Expenditure per capita at 1983 prices £[1]
United Kingdom[2]	1983	269
Germany, Federal Republic of	1983	253
USA[3]	1982	458
Japan[4]	1982	216

[1] At purchasing power parity; expenditure adjusted to calendar year, where necessary, using consumer prices indices.
[2] Excludes expenditure on nursing and paramedical courses at DHSS establishments.
[3] Includes capital expenditure.
[4] Excludes public subsidies to private education.

Language Teaching

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received the report of the committee established to advise on what children should know about language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am publishing today the report of the committee chaired by Sir John Kingman. I asked the committee to advise what, in general terms, children need to know about the English language, and in consequence what they should have been taught and be expected to understand on this score at ages 7, 11 and 16. I am grateful to the committee for its hard work. It has produced an interesting report which will contribute to discussion about the teaching of the English language and about the importance of the grammatical structure of the language and of the correct use of the spoken word.

English is one of the core subjects in the national curriculum as proposed in the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament. I am now appointing a working group on English to make recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study for English as a whole. The working group's terms of reference are set out in the table. I am specifically asking the English working group to take account of the relevant recommendations of the Kingman committee in its work on attainment targets and programmes of study.

The working group will be chaired by Professor Brian Cox, Pro-Vice Chancellor and John Edward Taylor Professor of English Literature at Manchester University. Its membership will be:

Mrs. Diane Billups, Head of Broughton Junior School, South Humberside.
Ms. Linda Cookson, Senior Tutor, Cental School of Speech and Drama.
Mr. Roald Dahl, Writer.
Mr. Roger Samways, Adviser for English and drama, Dorest LEA.
Professor David Skilton, Head of Department of English, UWIST; designated Head of the School of English Studies. Journalism and Philosophy at the new University of Wales College of Cardiff.
Mr. Brian Slough, Deputy Head, Kettering Boys' School, Northamptonshire.
Professor Michael Stubbs, Professor of Education with special reference to the teaching of English in Education, Department of English and Media Studies, University of London Institute of Education.
Dr. Charles Suckling, Chairman, Bradbury, Suckling & Partners Ltd, Scientific Consultants, member of Kingman Committee.

I expect the group to begin work in early May.

I shall be considering the Kingman committee's other detailed recommendations in due course in the light of public comment on its report and of the English working group's recommendations.

National Curriculum: Working Group on English Terms of Reference

Preamble

1. The Education Reform Bill, currently before Parliament, proposes the establishment of a National Curriculum of core and other foundation subjects for pupils of compulsory school age in England and Wales. For most of these subjects, including English which is a core subject, the Government wishes to establish clear objectives—attainment targets—for the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have acquired at or near the key ages of 7, 11, 14 and 16; and, to promote them, programmes of study describing the content, skills and processes which need to be covered during each key stage of compulsory education. Taken together, the attainment targets and programmes of study will provide the basis for assessing pupils' performance—in relation both to expected attainment, and to the next steps needed for the pupils' development.

2. Both the objectives (attainment targets) and means of achieving them (programmes of study) should leave scope for teachers to use their professional talents and skills to develop their own schemes of work, within a set framework which is known to all. It is the task of the working group to advise on that framework for English, which is a core subject. The framework should ensure, at the minimum, that all school leavers are competent in the use of English—written and spoken—whether or not it is their first language.

3. The Kingman Committee, established to advise the Secretary of State on what children should know about language, has made recommendations for attainment targets for knowledge about language at the ages of 7, 11 and 16. The working group should build on these to recommend attainment targets covering the grammatical structure of the English language. But English comprises both language and literature, including poetry and drama. The working group's recommendations on learning about language and its use should draw upon the English literary heritage; should promote the reading of great literature and the knowledge and appreciation of literature; and should indicate the types of literature which all pupils should cover in the course of their studies.

The Task

4. The Government has made it clear that it expects most curricular time at primary level to be taken up by the core subjects of English, maths and science. But it is important that in the primary phases attainment targets and programmes of study in the core subjects are looked at together as well as individually. The working groups on mathematics and science are well-advanced towards their final reports. The English working group is therefore asked to give immediate attention to recommendations on attainment targets for ages 7 and 11 and the associated programmes of study and to submit a report on these to the Secretary of State by 30 September 1988.

5. By the same date, the working group is asked to submit a progress letter to the Secretary of State on its provisional thinking about the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have attained and be able to demonstrate around the end of the academic year in which they reach the ages of 14 and 16.

6. By 30 April 1989 the working group is to submit a final report to the Secretary of State, setting out and justifying its final recommendations on attainment targets for the key ages of 14 and 16 and the associated programmes of study.

Approach

7. The working group should consult informally with relevant interests and have regard to the work of the other subject working groups, in particular that on Welsh. Additionally it should take account of:

(a) the broad framework proposed by the Task Group on Assessment and Testing for assessment and testing;

(b) the need for attainment targets which reflect the fact that in the primary stage, particularly for 7 year olds, English will support learning in all other subjects,and will be developed by how those are taught;

(c) the contribution which, more generally, English can make to learning about other subjects and the contributions which these subjects can make to learning about English, including the promotion of development of good written and spoken English in all subjects;

(d) the recommendations of the Kingman Committee on attainment targets for children's explicit and implicit knowledge about language at ages 7, 11 and 16;

(e) best practice and the results of relevant research and curriculum developments; and the issues covered in the supplementary guidance to the Group's Chairman.

Technology

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to set up a working group to recommend attainment targets and programmes of study for technology within the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are from today establishing a working group on design and technology. The group will advise on attainment targets and programmes of study for technology within the national curriculum for secondary school pupils. The science working group which we appointed last summer is making recommendations about technology for primary school pupils.

The design and technology working group will also advise on attainment targets and programmes of study for information technology, and on a framework for design across foundation subjects, for all pupils of compulsory school age. The working group's formal terms of reference which include guidance on the approach to technology within the national curriculum are set out below. We are grateful to Lady Parkes, a governor of the BBC and a member of the Secondary Examinations Council, for agreeing to take the chair of a working group on design and technology. The other members of the group are:

Ms. Krysia Brochocka—Educational design consultant
Mrs. Elsa Davies—Educational Liaison Officer, British Institute of Management
Mr. Malcolm Deere—Education Adviser (Curriculum), TVEI Unit, Manpower Services Commission
Mr. Denis Filer—Director of Engineering, ICI plc
Mr. Terry Gibbons — Head of Design Faculty, Gwendraeth Valley School, Dyfed
Mr. John Hammond—Lecturer in Computing Science, City University
Dr. Philip Hunter — Chief Education Officer, Staffordshire
Mr. Ben Kelsey — Adviser for Business Education, Hampshire Local Education Authority and Director of the National Business and Information Studies Project
Mr. Paddy O'Hagan — Head of Faculty, Design and Technology, Northolt High School, Ealing.

The group will start work as soon as possible. We are asking it to give interim advice by 31 October and final advice by 30 April 1989.

NATIONAL CURRICULUM DESIGN AND TECHNOLOGY WORKING GROUP

Terms of reference

Background

1. The Education Reform Bill currently before Parliament provides for the establishment of a national curriculum of core and other foundation subjects for pupils of compulsory school age in England and Wales. For most subjects, including technology, the Government wishes to establish clear objectives — attainment targets — for the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have acquired by the end of the academic year in which they reach the ages of 7, 11, 14 and 16; and to promote them, programmes of study describing the content, skills and processes which need to be covered during each key stage of compulsory education. Taken together, the attainment targets and programmes of study will provide the basis for assessing a pupil's performance, in relation both to expected attainment and to the next steps needed for the pupil's development.

2. Both the objectives (attainment targets) and means of achieving them (programmes of study) should leave scope for teachers to use their professional talents and skills to develop their own schemes of work, within a set framework which is known to all. It is the task of the Working Group on Design and Technology to advise on that framework for design and technology.

The Task

3. The science working group is already looking at attainment targets and programmes of study for primary technology. The design and technology group should focus on the final two key stages, as defined in the Education Reform Bill—that is, the secondary phase—building on the work of the science group for the primary phase.

4. The working group is asked to submit an interim report to the Secretaries of State by 31 October 1988 outlining:

(i) the contribution which design and technology should make to the overall school curriculum and how that will inform the group's thinking about attainment targets and programmes of study;

(ii) its provisional thinking about the knowledge, skills and understanding which pupils of different abilities and maturities should be expected to have attained and be able to demonstrate at key ages;

(iii) its thinking about the programmes of study which would be consistent with the attainment targets provisionally identified.

5. By 30 April 1989 the working group is to submit a final report to the Secretaries of State setting out and justifying its final recommendations on attainment targets and the programmes of study for design and technology. In addition, the working group should recommend attainment targets and programmes of study for design and for information technology in the first two key stages, for primary pupils, to supplement the recommendations of the science working group.

Approach

6. In approaching its task the working group is to view technology as that area of the curriculum in which pupils design and make useful objects or systems, thus developing their ability to solve practical problems. The working group should assume that pupils will draw on knowledge and skills from a range of subject areas, but always involving science or mathematics. They should be taught the principles and practice of good design, the application of theoretical knowledge, and within that context the practical craft skills needed for realising their designs in wood, metal, plastics, textiles and other materials. They should also learn about the variety of modern materials and technologies in use in the industrial and commercial world. Pupils should prepare for the world of work by learning how to work in teams as well as by themselves; by understanding the importance of functional efficiency, quality, appearance and marketability; and about the importance of working within financial and technical constraints. Modern business practice increasingly involves the use of IT. Technological education should equip pupils with basic IT skills and develop an awareness of the potential use of IT and computer technology whether in the business office, or manufacturing or commerce.

7. Technology as described above is an activity which goes "across the curriculum", drawing on and linking in with a wide range of subjects. The group should start from the basis that technology is an area of study in its own right, with its own distinctive objectives and content. This does not necessarily mean that technology must be a separately timetabled subject: schools will be free to teach technology how they choose, provided that the activity is coordinated as a clear programme and directed towards the distinctive objectives of technology. By the end of the third key stage of their compulsory education pupils should have acquired a firm basis of skills, knowledge and understanding in technology. This will provide a broad foundation on which pupils can build in undertaking technological work as defined in paragraph 6 in more specialised contexts, including other subject areas during the fourth key stage, whether for GCSE or otherwise.

8. Design will be an essential part of technology as defined above, but will also draw on and contribute to other areas of the curriculum. The Working Group is asked to consider design in all its aspects throughout the period of compulsory education, identifying and recommending attainment targets for those of particular importance in technology and recommending a framework within which other aspects will need to be developed in other subjects. The group should work on the basis that the distinctive objectives of design and technology are that a pupil at the end of his or her compulsory education, should:

(i) be able to design and make artefacts and systems, applying scientific or mathematical and other knowledge and skills;

(ii) be familiar with designing processes and have had experience of applying them to real life tasks within typical constraints (time, money etc) with due regard to cost, marketability, social, environmental and other relevant factors;

(iii) appreciate the importance of design and technology in society, historically and present day, particularly as it affects the economy.

9. The use of computer and information technology and other advance technologies in control, simulation and data storage and retrieval is becoming increasingly important in our society. This fact should be reflected in the use of computer and information technology across the school curriculum. Each subject group as it is set up is being asked to consider the scope for using computer and information technology in its subject and to frame appropriate attainment targets. However the design and technology group is asked to provide within the national curriculum a focus for the developments of computer and IT awareness, and skills such as keyboard skills and basic programming, by recommending appropriate attainment targets at the four key stages together with a supporting programme of study related to IT and basic computer skills and to awareness of the uses of advanced technology.

10. In carrying out its work the group should consult informally and selectively with relevant interests including industry and have regard to the work of other subject groups, particularly the work of the science group on primary technology. Additionally the group should take account of

(i) the broad framework proposed by TGAT for assessment and testing;

(ii) the contributions which design and technology can make to learning about other subjects, and other subjects can make to learning about design and technology;

(iii) best practice and the results of any relevant research and development, and in particular developments under TVEI.

and the issues covered in the supplementary guidance to the Group's Chairman.

Departmental Reports

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the names of all statutory bodies, committees of inquiries and task groups and other similar bodies which are due to report to him in 1988, with details in each case of the subject matter of the reports; when the reports are expected to be submitted to him; and when they are likely to be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 28 April 1988]: The information required is listed in the table. The list excludes Her Majesty's inspectorate and standing advisory bodies such as the University Grants Committee and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr Roc Sanford

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an independent inquiry into the circumstances under which charges were brought, and criminal proceedings conducted against Mr Roc Sanford by the Metropolitan police on the grounds of the possession of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. An inquiry supervised by the Police Complaints Authority has already been carried out by the Metropolitan police. Its findings are still being considered.

Child Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has in relation to the number of teachers, social workers, medical staff and associated staff who have been vetted by police before they are employed in jobs where they work with children; and whether his Department keeps information as to the number of people refused employment and the reasons therefor.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest figures available are for the period 17 July 1986 to 31 August 1987. During this period, there were 161,276 requests for police checks under the arrangements introduced for the protection of children. Information about the professions for which these checks were carried out is not held centrally.

Information is not held centrally about the number of people refused employment as a result of information provided through these arrangements, as it is for employing authorities to determine what action to take in the light of this information and the other circumstances of the case.

Minicab Drivers (Assaults)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the number of assaults on minicab drivers in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Comprehensive information about such assaults is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that his records show that in the period 1 January 1988 to 25 April 1988 there were 18 cases of theft or robbery involving cab drivers in the Leyton area in which there was also some degree of assault. These cases may include incidents in which licensed taxi drivers as well as minicab drivers were involved. We fully support the efforts which the police are making to prevent such crimes taking place and to bring to justice those who perpetrate them.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly cost of keeping a prisoner on remand in (a) prison and (b) police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the financial year 1986-87, the latest year for which information is available, the average weekly cost of keeping a prisoner in custody in a local prison or remand centre was £231. During the same period, the average weekly cost of keeping a prisoner on remand in a police cell was £651.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost which has fallen on police authorities in England and Wales as a result of prisoners being remanded to police cells in the first quarter of 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the costs which have fallen to police authorites in England and Wales as a result of prisoners being remanded to police cells in the first quarter of 1988 is not available, but the amount reimbursed by the prison department in the first quarter of 1988 to police authorities in respect of claims received for prisoners being remanded to police cells is £18,316,638.

Firemen

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many otherwise unemployed persons are employed as part-time firemen by fire authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not held centrally.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the practice of immigration officers handing files relating to individual applicants to those applicants.

Mr. Renton: It is not the practice of immigration officers to hand files to applicants. The individual case which I assume the hon. Member has in mind was an isolated error for which apologies have already been made.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest statistics available on the number and percentage of cases in which he did not uphold the decision to refuse entry clearance after representation by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Appeals against refusal of entry clearance are properly a matter for the immigration appellate authorities.

Prison Population

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population per 100,000 inhabitants on 1 February 1987 and for each year since 1983 in the United Kingdom; what information he has as to the comparable figures for each member state of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Information published by the Council of Europe is shown in the table. The Council of Europe publishes information on the prison population in member states twice a year in its "Prison Information Bulletin", copies of which are held in the Library.

The figures for different countries are unlikely to be strictly comparable because the definitions of prisons and prisoners vary from one country to another, reflecting different legal and administrative systems. Such differences may have a substantial effect on the comparisons. However, the most recent information indicates that on 1 February 1987 the prison population per 100,000 inhabitants in the United Kingdom, at 96, was the fourth highest among 19 member states; for seven of the 19 states, including France and Germany, the rate was over 80 per 100,000 inhabitants. Between February 1983 and February 1987, the prison population per 100,000 inhabitants increased in 13 of the member states. In England and Wales the increase was 8 per cent. This increase was substantially lower than in several other countries: Portugal (60 per cent.), Ireland (46 per cent.), Luxembourg (37 per cent.), France (31 per cent.), Netherlands (29 per cent.) and Cyprus (28 per cent.).

British Citizens Overseas (Franchise)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement the Government's proposals to extend the franchise for British citizens overseas; and what plans he has for consultation about this matter.

Mr. Hurd: During this Parliament I intend to bring forward legislation to extend the eligibility of British citizens living overseas to register as electors in this country. I have placed in the Library copies of a consultation paper which the Home Departments are issuing today to representatives of the local authorities.

electoral registration officers, and main political parties. This discusses possible ways of giving effect to our manifesto commitment to British citizens overseas.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Personal Computers (Exports)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the effect of current restrictions on the temporary export of personal computers by British business men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am aware of the problems which controls on the temporary export of personal computers have been causing British business men. In agreement with Her Majesty's Customs, steps have been taken to ease the burden. An export licence will no longer be required for the temporary export to most free world destinations of many small personal computers for the visitor's own use.

Radioactive Packages (Export Licences)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any export licences were granted in the years (a) 1970 to May 1979, and (b) May 1979 to the present to Amersham International plc, or its predecessor, the Radiochemical Centre, for shipments of radioactive packages from the United Kingdom to the Centre Etudes Nucléairs at Mol in Belgium.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to make public information of this kind.

WALES

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what courses are available in Wales for nurses and midwives to undertake further training to improve the scope and standard of their skills.

Mr. Grist: The following courses are available in Wales to enable nurses and midwives to undertake further training to improve the scope and standard of their skills:

Courses approved by Welsh National Board

(a) Courses approved by the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (WNB) and qualifications recorded on the register of nurses, midwives and health visitors. This training covers First and Second level registration.

Registered General Nurse
Registered Mental Nurse
Registered Mental Handicap Nurse
Sick Children's Nurse

Hospitals (Staffing)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the recommended staffing levels by patient category in Welsh hospitals; and what are the current staffing levels.

Mr. Grist: There are no recommended staffing levels by patient category in hospitals. The determination of appropriate staffing levels is an operational matter for individual health authorities.

Staff numbers by individual hospitals are not held centrally. With the exception of medical and dental staff and nursing and midwifery staff, information which is held centrally does not distinguish between community and hospital based staff.

The table provides a breakdown by authority, and between hospital and community based staff where appropriate, at 30 September 1986:

	Clwyd	E. Dyfed	Gwent	Gwynedd	M. Glam	Pembs	Powys	S. Glam	W. Glam	WHC-SA	Wales

Water Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average payment and the percentage increases in the Welsh water rate in each year since 1974.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the table:

Welsh Water Authority: average household bill

1975-76	37·44	—
1976-77	43·91	17·3

1986-87	114·01	9·7
1987-88	122·61	7·5
1988-89	134·57	9·7

[2] The rateable value was increased from £120 to £124 in 1982-83.
Notes: Comparable figures are not available for 1974-75 for the average household.
In 1978-79 the average bill decreased by 7·4 per cent. over the previous year.

Central and Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating the capital expenditure by central and local government departments in each of the counties of Wales for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Walker: A breakdown of the totality of central Government expenditure in Wales is not readily available in the form requested. However, for the major programmes within my responsibility, the information is estimated to be as follows:

Gross capital expenditure in 1986-87

£ million

	Clwyd	Dyfed	Gwent	Gwynedd	Mid Glamorgan	Powys	South Glamorgan	West Glamorgan
Local authorities	53·004	41·956	87·344	27·665	80·329	15·357	62·458	61·611
Direct central Government:
(i) health[1]	6·109	7·405	6·976	2·579	6·753	1·269	10·726	12·167
(ii) roads	27·584	19·414	8·508	25·162	9·199	3·222	3·813	2·253
(iii) agricultural grants[2]	1·971	4·245	0·400	2·361	0·362	4·757	0·066	0·254

[1] Health authority capital expenditure, excluding residual WHCSA expenditure.
[2] Net of EC receipts and excluding the Agriculture Improvement Scheme.

For details of regional development grant and regional selective assistance expenditure, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 24 February, Official Report columns 215-16.

Urban Aid

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each county and for each district in Wales the number and the cost of schemes approved by his Department under the urban aid programme since 1974.

Mr. Grist: Information prior to 1979-80 is not available in the form required. Since that time the total allocations made to individual local authorities and the number of new schemes approved are as follows:

Welsh Crafts Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement concerning the future financing, structure and marketing of the Welsh crafts industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: I announced a comprehensive packagoe of support for the Welsh craft industry on 27 April. The arrangements have been welcomed by all the key bodies involved, including the Welsh Development Agency, Mid-Wales Development and the Wales Craft Council.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those primary schools in Powys which (a) have classes where Welsh is the sole or main medium of instruction of first or second language pupils, (b) have classes of first or second language pupils where some of the teaching is through the medium of Welsh, and (c) teach no Welsh or where Welsh is taught as a second language but not used as a teaching medium.

EMPLOYMENT

Nitrosamines (Safety Guidelines)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals and guidelines his Department is giving to industry to implement new machine design, material substitution, improved ventilation and hygiene to eradicate the possible cancer causing hazards of synthetic metal cutting and grinding fluids contaminated with nitrosamines.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has recently published guidance note EH49 entitled "Nitrosamines in synthetic metal cutting and grinding fluids". A copy will be placed in the Library. This guidance note is available to the general public through HMSO and gives information and guidance on the occurrence and hazards of nitrosamines in synthetic metal cutting fluids and the precautions needed to elimate or control those hazards.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the future of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations calling for the scheme to be abolished. The Government have made clear that they understand the views expressed, but have explained that there are no present plans for change.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 22 April 1988]: During the financial year 1987-88 approximately £50,000 was spent on travel abroad by Ministers and immediate staff and approximately £600,000 was spent on travel abroad by DE group officials.

SCOTLAND

Rating Revaluation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the details of the system to be used to limit commercial rate increases after the 1990 revaluation.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last week announced plans to cushion Scottish businesses from the full effects of increases in their rates bills brought about by the 1990 revaluation. Our intention is to place a ceiling on the amount of the increase which any non-domestic ratepayer will face in any one year following the revaluation. We also recognise that, in the case of small businesses, rates tend to form a higher share of costs. We intend, therefore, to take power to provide more generous arrangements for small businesses. The levels of the ceilings and the definition of small businesses will be decided once the effects of the revaluation can be more clearly judged.

Deprived Areas

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the criteria used in allocating grants to areas of deprivation; and if he will list those areas to which grants have been allocated.

Mr. Lang: Urban areas with levels of deprivation in the worst 10 per cent. in Scotland qualify for assistance under the urban programme. In the current year new grants have been allocated to a range of projects in all mainland regions except Borders and Highland regions. The eligible areas are listed on page 18 of "New Life for Urban Scotland" published on 29 March 1988.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning his recent consultative document on pesticide residues.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have to date received one substantive written response.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his long-term policy with regard to farm incomes.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's policy is to promote a viable and competitive agricultural industry. The reforms of the CAP agreed at the recent European Council should lead to a better balance of supply and demand which should lead to farmers having greater stability in the long run and a better atmosphere within which to make sound business decisions about the future.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Costs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost per pupil of education in Northern Ireland at (a) primary and (b) secondary levels; what were the equivalent figures five and 10 years ago in cash and real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The recurrent cost figures are as follows:

	1976-77 £	1981-82 £	1986-87 £
Cash prices
Primary	257·28	560·60	794·18
Secondary	404·30	853·05	1,312·08
Real terms
Primary	630·84	716·27	794·18
Secondary	991·32	1,089·93	1,312·08

Unit expenditure in 1986-87 (the latest year for which figures are available) has more than trebled in cash terms from 1976-77 levels. In real terms the increases are over 25 per cent. and should be set against a backcloth of falling enrolments, down more than 8 per cent. (or 31,000 pupils) in these 10 years. This is clear evidence of the Government's continuing commitment to education in the Province.

Adult Training Programme

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of, and if he will list, the respondents to the Department of Economic Development's advertisement in the Belfast Telegraph of 3 March on the new adult training programme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: A total of 367 persons and organisations responded to the Department's advertisement published in local newspapers throughout Northern Ireland during March 1988. These responses are being treated in confidence by the Department and it would not therefore be appropriate to list the respondents.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the applicability of the new arrangements for the adult training programme for Northern Ireland; and when the new arrangements will be announced.

Mr. Viggers: The new arrangements for adult training in Great Britain recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment do not extend to Northern Ireland. Consideration is now being given to the production of corresponding proposals for Northern Ireland which take account of the local circumstances. These proposals will be announced in due course.

Economic Development

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the funds expended in 1986-87 and 1987-88 on economic development through the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit.

Mr. Viggers: Of the funds allocated to economic development in Northern Ireland in 1986-87 £107 million was expended by the Industrial Development Board and £25·5 million by the Local Enterprise Development Unit.

During the 1987-88 financial year expenditure by the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit was £99·5 million and £22 million respectively.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on community economic development; and if he will list the initiatives or projects supported or funded by the Department of Economic Development in 1986-87 and 1987-88 to stimulate this form of economic development.

Mr. Viggers: The Government are committed to encouraging local communities to play as full a part as possible in economic development and job creation throughout Northern Ireland. To this end the action for community employment scheme provides employment opportunities for persons who have been unemployed for more than one year in a wide range of projects of benefit to the community. In the year 1986-87 6,150 were employed under the ACE scheme at a cost of £28·54 million. In 1987-88 6,200 were employed at a cost of £28·84 million. As part of the ACE programme a pilot enterprise scheme was launched in May 1987 to help ACE workers move into self-employment. During 1987-88 a total of 84 applications were received under the scheme and of these 51 were approved. The local enterprise programme has supported the establishment of 35 locally based business-led enterprise groups capable of accommodating and supporting 1,000 small businesses and 3,000 jobs by the end of this year. Assistance totalling £3·5 million has been offered under the programme during the past two years.

Substitute Teachers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in view of the fact that one to two-day courses for teachers are ineligible for substitute cover, and the implications for health and safety standards, he will review the operation of substitute teacher regulations in primary schools in Northern Ireland with particular regard to allowing primary school principals to obtain a substitute teacher in the first and second day of absence.

Dr. Mawhinney: A review of the substitution provision is being carried out by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

The teachers regulations provide that:

- in the case of primary schools with three or fewer teachers full substitute cover is provided;
- in the case of schools with an average daily enrolment of 222 pupils or fewer substitute cover is provided after the first day of a teacher's absence or from the first day if a teacher's absence is a planned absence of mor than one day's duration; and
- in all other schools substitute cover is provided after the second day on which a teacher is absent or from the first day of absence if the teacher's absence is a planned absence of more than two days' duration.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representations from trade unions and individual teachers he received concerning the implementation of the substitute teacher regulations in primary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland Teachers Council has raised the matter of substitution cover at the Negotiating committee on Teachers Salaries and Conditions of Service. Representations have also been made by the National Association of Head Teachers and by individual teachers of two primary schools.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial savings have been made by the Department of Education by the implementation of substitute teacher regulations in primary schools in Northern Ireland since September 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. However, in the period 1 September 1987 to 31 March 1988 compared with the corresponding period last year the number of days on which substitutions were employed in all schools, decreased by 25,000. This represents an estimated financial saving of £1·5 million, but this may not be wholly attributable to the introduction of the new substitutes provisions.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much per day it costs the Department of Education to employ a substitute teacher in a primary school in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the current average daily salary and associated employer's superannuation and national insurance contributions is £59.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many substitute teachers were employed in primary schools in each of the education and library boards in Northern Ireland in each academic year from 1980-81 to 1987-88;

(2) what percentage of the primary education budget was allocated to the employment of substitute teachers in the primary sector in Northern Ireland in each academic year from 1980-81 to 1987-88.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the salary cost in the financial year 1987-88 (the only year for which figures are available) as a percentage of the total provisional expenditure on primary schools is 4·3 per cent.

Belfast Action Teams

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the remit of the Belfast action teams; if he will list the budgets for each of the existing and proposed teams; and what funding has been made available to community groups under this initiative.

Mr. Needham: The remit of the Belfast action teams is to secure an improvement in the quality of life and opportunities for people living in areas of multiple social and economic deprivation through an area-based strategy involving the local community. The principal elements of this strategy are the creation of employment, the enhancement of employment opportunities, the better co-ordination where appropriate of public services and an improvement in the physical environment of the area. The existing four teams each have a budget of £500,000 per annum as will any further teams. During the financial year 1987-88 community groups received £626,000 under this initiative.

Rates

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Housing Executive tenants in receipt of supplementary benefit, having their rent deducted at source, will now be paying their 20 per cent. portion of rates through the post office.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I am informed by the chairman that the executive estimate that some 77,000 of its tenants previously in receipt of supplementary benefit will have to pay at least 20 per cent. of the rates on their homes.

Of these 77,000, some 64,000 had previously their rent and rates charges met in full. The remainder had to meet charges because of non-dependants in the household.

Housing Executive (Arbitration)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned indicate the date of the final certificates.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that the dates of the final certificates for each of the contracts concerned were:

(a) 30 May 1986
(b) 19 March 1987
(c) 20 January 1987
(d) 12 May 1987

Housing Executive Contracts

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to institute the practice of a technical audit for Housing Executive contracts, as recommended by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has already developed a system for the audit of its building contracts in line with the recommendations of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned give the actual sums paid at arbitration for (a) the clerks of works, (b) legal fees, (c) technical costs and (d) staff costs.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that no specific sums were paid at arbitration for the clerks of works; technical costs or staff costs. The following costs were paid by the Housing Executive in respect of contractors legal fees for each of the contracts concerned:

(a) £2,990.
(b) Nil.
(c) Nil.
(d) £2,500.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer of 23 March to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will indicate for each of the contracts concerned the date of (a) acceptance of tender, (b) the contract sum, (c) the contract period and (d) the date of possession of site.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information is as follows:

	Acceptance of tender	Contract sum £	Contract period	Date of possession of site
(a)	18 May 1979	147,636·96	18 months	31 May 1979
(b)	23 March 1984	120,108·00	20 weeks	31 March 1984
(c)	27 July 1981	202,056·00	4 weeks	17 August 1981
(d)	20 October 1981	125,531·85	11 months	9 November 1981

Housing Executive (Arbitrations)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will indicate (a) the contractual date for completion and (b) the contractual date for final measurements for each of the contracts concerned.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the contractual dates for completion and final measurement respectively for each of the four contracts were:—

(a) 18 November 1980 and 18 May 1981;
(b) 13 August 1984: no specific date for final measurement was required in this form of demolition contract;
(c) 17 December 1981 and 17 June 1982;
(d) 9 October 1982 and 9 April 1983.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will indicate for each of the contracts concerned the amount of the bills of adjustments.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the amounts of the bills of adjustment for each of the contracts concerned were:—

(a) £261,359·00
(b) £163,780·84
(c) £209,585·35
(d) £164,384·00

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contractors began arbitration between themselves and the Housing Executive in the financial year 1986-87; what were the total sums claimed; how many of these arbitration proceedings were settled and at what cost to the executive during that year; and how many have been settled to date.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that eight contractors began arbitration in the year 1986-87; the total sum claimed was approximately £1·52 million; three of these arbitration proceedings were settled in 1986-87 at a total cost to the Housing Executive of approximately £34,420; and a total of five have been settled to date.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned indicate the amount certified at the dates of completion certificates.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the following amounts were certified at practical completion for each of the contracts concerned:

(a) £188,473·43
(b) £146,780·84: no provision was made in this type of demolition contract for a certificate of practical completion. This amount was determined when the contractor deemed the contract to have been completed.
(c) £162,000.
(d) £146,300.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned indicate the amount granted at arbitration and whether these amounts are included in the sums paid in respect of the bills of adjustments.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the following amounts were agreed in settlement between the parties for each of the contracts concerned and were included in the sums paid in respect of the bills of adjustment:

(a) £9,500.
(b) £17,000.
(c) £12,420.
(d) £5,000.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will indicate for each of the contracts concerned the date of the certificate of practical completion.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the dates of the certificate of practical completion for each of the contracts concerned were:

(a) 22 January 1982;
(b) No specific date;
(c) 26 April 1982;
(d) 20 September 1983.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned define the major points of claim.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the major points of claim for each of the contracts concerned were as follows:

(a) Alleged failure to give possession of site; delay and disruption; failure to measure and value; breach of contract.
(b) Alleged failure to give full vacant possession.
(c) Alleged delay in nomination; water damage; delay and disruption; repayment of liquidated damages.
(d) Alleged failure to give possession; delay and disruption; late nomination; failure to provide information; delays in payments; negligence; breach of contract.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, about the Housing Executive, regarding the four arbitrations referred to, he will for each of the contracts concerned indicate the actual date of final measurement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the actual dates of final measurement for each of the four contracts concerned were:-

(a) June 1983;
(b) March 1987;
(c) August 1983;
(d) October 1984.

Rowland Inquiry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report those recommendations of the Rowland inquiry which have not been put into effect.

Mr. Needham: [holding answer 19 April 1988]: None.

Midwives

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent qualified midwives working in Northern Ireland (a) in hospital maternity units, (b) in special care baby units, (c) in education and (d) as community midwives.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Whole-time equivalent (WTE) of qualified midwives

Year	Hospital[1]	Education	Community[2]
1981	841·17	20·75	116·20
1982	850·71	22·42	127·95
1983	858·52	23·00	132·21
1984	915·23	23·50	141·51
1985	907·80	23·75	143·24
1986	861·07	24·50	152·82
1987	877·20	25·33	169·10

[1] It is not possible to distinguish between midwives working in hospital maternity units and those working in special care baby units.

Baby Care Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent nurses working in Northern Ireland in (a) hospital maternity units and (b) special care baby units.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 April 1988]: It has not been possible to distinguish between nurses working in hospital maternity units and special care baby units. The combined totals are as follows:

	Nurses
1981	..
1982	113,80
1983	108,47
1984	95,58
1985	115,15
1986	89,30
1987	100,52

.. = Not available.

DEFENCE

Exports (Value)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of British defence exports in 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total figures for the value of defence exports for 1987 are not yet available. We hope to publish them in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988.

21st Special Operations Squadron

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has to the date on which 21st Special Operations Squadron of the United States Air Force was activated; on what date it will become operational; what its role will be as declared to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; what British military facilities, other than RAF Woodbridge, are to be used by, or in support of, this unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The personnel and equipment of the unit which will be known as the United States Air Force 21st Special Operations Squadron are currently operational at RAF Woodbridge but the official designation of the new unit has yet to be formalised; the process is expected to be completed in June. The unit's role is to train and support United States Special Operations forces when deployed to the United Kingdom for operations in support of NATO by providing resupply and airlift. The helicopters of the squadron will also assume responsibility for providing humanitarian assistance as required. The squadron will be able to make use of the range of training and support facilities made available to United States forces stationed in the United Kingdom.

RAF Fighter Controllers (Training)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many simulators have been installed at United Kingdom air defence ground environment radar stations to provide interception control training for RAF fighter controllers; when each one was installed; and what plans exist to install further such simulators.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Four simulators have been installed at United Kingdom air defence ground environment operational units to provide interception control training for RAF fighter controllers. They were installed between 1974 and 1980.

The improved UKADGE is being equipped with a modern centralised interception control simulation facility, to which all RAF interceptor controllers will have access, in order to maintain operational standards.

Air Defence

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to hold the first exercise to practise the movement of United Kingdom air defence ground environment mobile radar convoys.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The first such exercise took place in 1985.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sites have been identified for the deployment of decoy radars as part of the United Kingdom air defence ground environment.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to give such details of operational plans.

Trial Radar Installation (Bradwell)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the trial radar installation near Bradwell-on-Sea, Essex.

Mr. Sainsbury: The facility near Bradwell-on-Sea was installed to investigate high-frequency, surface-wave radar technology.

Bistatic Radar

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for the deployment of bistatic radar in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no firm plans for the deployment of bistatic radar in the United Kingdom.

Air Defence Ground Environmental System

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what slippage has occurred in the date of full operational capability for the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environmental system since 1977;

(2) what elements of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environmental system are already in operation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment system is being introduced into service progressively over a number of years, in accordance with a plan which takes account of the need to maintain a continuous operational capability as the transition from the old to the new is accomplished. Not surprisingly for a system involving as many complex elements as this, there has been some slippage; costs have, however, remained within the terms of the fixed or firm price contracts under which the system has been developed. The bulk of the equipment has already been built and installed with some elements of the system already in service use. The remaining elements will be introduced into service during the next few years.

ALARM System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the expected final cost of the anti-radiation missile system — ALARM; and when is the expected date of entry into service;

(2) what was the initial estimated cost of the anti-radiation missile system — ALARM; and what was the expected date of entry into service.

Mr. Sainsbury: At 1987-88 prices including VAT, the total cost of the ALARM missile system as estimated in 1983, at the time of the decision to procure it, was some £350 million; the current estimate is some £610 million, the great majority of which is represented by the fixed price contract recently announced. In 1983, the missile was expected to enter service in the late 1980s; on current plans it will do so in the early 1990s.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what lessons he has drawn for the process of decision-taking on procurement of missile systems from the process of choosing the anti-radiation missile system—ALARM;

(2) what anti-radiation missile system was originally sought by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: A study has recently been completed on the arrangements for managing major projects, such as ALARM, in the Procurement Executive. A copy of the report "Learning From Experience" was placed in the Library on 30 March. In addition, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 30 March, at column 466, to my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis).

As the House was told at the time, the decision taken in 1983 to buy ALARM in preference to HARM was not an easy one. Both options had advantages and disadvantages, and a wide range of complex factors had to be weighed. Both systems were operationally acceptable to the Royal Air Force. The process of evaluation and decision-taking was carried out with scrupulous care befitting the importance of the decision. The operational arguments were reviewed afresh last autumn and the clear conclusion was that ALARM was more suitable for the Royal Air Force's needs.

Chemical Defence Establishment (Soviet Scientists)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed visit of Soviet scientists to the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I will make an announcement in due course.

Submarines (Faulty Welding)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking with VSEL in respect of the incorrectly welded unit in a Trafalgar class submarine in August 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: SSN hull units contain a slightly thicker section at the keel to provide an internal corrosion element. The incorrectly welded unit has been measured and found to contain a sufficient element for corrosion and it is therefore intended to leave the unit where it is presently positioned. The performance and life of the submarine will not be affected.

For the future, we shall be requiring VSEL to ensure that its quality control arrangements prevent such incidents happening again.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking on the VSEL report on Trident parts, lost off the Mull of Galloway and Walney Island on 5 to 6 February.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following the receipt of the report by VSEL in which the company identifies plans to put in hand a number of improvements to procedures, the Department is making arrangements to audit the implementation of these improvements.

Courtney Hill, Newry

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the six soldiers found hiding in an old school in the Courtney Hill area of Newry on 12 April were doing; why they were in plain clothes; why they were armed with pump action shotguns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I can confirm that four soldiers were in the building on 12 April. However, they were carrying out properly authorised duties, they were all in uniform and they were equipped with service issue weapons. It is not the practice to comment on the detail of operations.

Greenham Common

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what powers RAF Greenham Common was acquired and has been developed by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: RAF Greenham Common was first developed as a wartime airbase in 1941 on parts of Greenham and Crookham commons under the provisions of the Defence Regulations conferred by the Emergency Powers Act 1939. The then Secretary of State for Air acquired the freehold of Crookham common in 1955 and Greenham common in 1960.

The wartime Defence Regulations remained in force until 31 December 1958. Subsequent building work at RAF Greenham Common was then subject to the provisions of the Law of Property Act 1925, which lay down that consents are required from the Secretary of State for the Environment, over and above normal planning consultation, before building on land subject to rights of common. The rights of common at Greenham and Crookham commons are specific to a limited number of property owners and include rights to graze livestock and take gravel.

Although the normal planning procedures applying to Crown Land have been scrupulously observed, no consents under the Law of Property Act 1925 from the Secretary of State for the Environment have been sought by the Ministry of Defence since the lapse of the wartime Defence Regulations. Consequently, doubts about the legal position have been raised.

Additional facilities at RAF Greenham Common will be needed in connection with the inspection arrangements under the agreed verification regime once the INF treaty is ratified. Steps therefore need to be taken to remove a legal obstacle to further construction which could impede this and other work.

It has therefore been decided that the appropriate course would be to negotiate fair compensation for the legal extinction of the commoners' rights which we propose to pursue under the provisions of the Defence Act 1854.

This matter is legally quite distinct from the question of the legality of the byelaws at RAF Greenham Common which has arisen as a result of the recent decision by the Reading Crown court, and has been raised in the House on 26 April 1988 at columns 190-91.

Ships (Lost Components)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answers of 15 February, Official Report, colunns 448-50, what surveillance his Department exercises over Trident contractors, with particular reference to methods of transport used for delivering components and integral parts and the use of foreign-registered ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Trident contractors are subject to the same supervision as any other MOD suppliers, and the level of supervision is dependent on the security level of the equipment involved. The MOD instructions on security in industry included in these contracts permitted the use of foreign vessels for the transportation of this type of fabrication.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gulf War

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate fresh moves through the United Nations designed to bring the Iran-Iraq war to an end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have played a leading role as a permanent member of the Security Council to bring about a negotiated settlement to the Iran-Iraq conflict. We shall continue to do our utmost to support the United Nations Secretary General in his work to reach a settlement via United Nations Security Council resolution 598 and in such follow-up measures as may be necessary to achieve compliance with this mandatory resolution.

Polygraph Testing

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the wider introduction of polygraph testing as recommended by the Security Commission in 1984.

Mr. Mellor: Following completion of the first phase of the polygraph pilot scheme, an independent scientific study of the evidence about the validity of polygraphic techniques was commissioned. When the results of this study have been assessed, a decision will be taken on whether to proceed with the second phase of the pilot scheme. There are no plans for wider introduction of the polygraph.

Israel (Sanctions)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give consideration to the application of selective economic sanctions against Israel.

Mr. Mellor: Economic sanctions would not help bring about a solution of the problems of the region.

Falklands Fishing Zone

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the economic progress in the Falklands fishing zone.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated revenue to the Falkland Islands Government (FIG) from fishing licences and trans-shipping fees for the 1987-88 financial year is £18·65 million. In addition, Stanley Fisheries Limited has received joint venture premiums of £6·2 million. This income has provided a substantial boost to FIG revenues.

Intergovernmental Organisations

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list in the Official Report the intergovernmental organisations, excluding the European Communities, of which the United Kingdom is a member, the amount of the United Kingdom's annual contribution to each organisation, the percentage of each organisation's budget which this represents and which Government Department accounts for each contribution.

Mr. Eggar: The policy of this Government is identical to that of its predecessors: to meet our obligations to international organisations in full and on time. Assessed United Kingdom contributions are usually determined by reference to a pre-set scale of assessment which varies from one organisation to another. Voluntary contributions are determined by the Minister concerned.

For the international financial institutions, such as the World Bank group, the regional development banks and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, we seek equitable burden-sharing in the capital stock of each institution and in the soft fund replenishments.

Budgetary matters are discussed with other countries as appropriate.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on a report issued by the United States Department of Defence in autumn 1987 on the problems of safeguarding and physical security of plutonium in international commerce; and if this report has any implication for safeguarding and security arrangements for planned air freighting of plutonium from BNFL, Sellafield, to Japan.

Mr. Mellor: We are obtaining a copy of the report, and I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the delays in the application for entry clearance of Mrs. T. A. (Islamabad immigration office ref. 1mm 90912) about whom the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member for Stretford on 7 March; if he will expedite consideration of this application; and if he will give details of the expected time at which it will be resolved.

Mr. Eggar: The background to this application was explained in my letter of 7 March 1988. Further information since received by the embassy in Islamabad necessitated the case being referred to the Home Office on 12 April 1988 for decision. My hon. Friend will write further on this.

Council of Ministers

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present nine meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for May.

At the EC/ASEAN meeting on 2-3 May, Ministers will discuss relations between the Community and ASEAN, and other international issues.

The Internal Market Council meets on 3 May to discuss measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 16-17 May to continue its discussions on the 1988 price-fixing proposals and to consider various proposals forming part of the programme for the completion of the single market.

The Education Council meets on 24 May to discuss the European dimension in education, a proposal to increase awareness of Community in schools; the transition of young people from education to adult and working life; education and the environment; teaching of foreign languages; medium-term priorities for education co-operation; and prospects for COMETT (a scheme to promote high technology cooperation between industry and universities) and ERASMUS (a scheme to encourage students to spend time at European universities).

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 24-25 May. Discussions are expected to include the extension of the food aid framework regulation; preparation for the EC-Israel Co-operation Council; relations between the Community and the United States; progress made in negotiations with Hungary on a trade and co-operation agreement; implemention of the European Council conclusions on financing the Community; and dates for the 1989 European Parliamentary elections.

The Industry Council on 27 May is likely to hold preliminary discussions on the future of ECSC steel production quotas.

The Culture Council meets on 27 May to discuss priorities for further cultural co-operation at Community level and its implemention.

The Health Council will meet on 31 May to discuss progress on two draft directives under the cancer programme concerning labelling of tobacco products and tar yield; proposals for the collection of epidemiological data and the exchange of information on other measures concerning AIDS; a Commission report on toxicology; health aspects of medical technology and data processing; biotechnology; and the authorisation of proprietary medicinal products.

The Development Council will meet on 31 May. Ministers are expected to discuss a draft resolution on the economic situation and adjustment process in sub-Saharan Africa; the European volunteer service; a report on financial and technical cooperation with developing Asian and Latin American countries from 1976 to 1986 and UNGA's mid-term review of the critical situation in sub-Saharan Africa. The Council will also review the first year of the operation of COMPEX, the system for compensating less developed countries not signatory to the ACP-EEC convention for loss of export earnings; and progress on food strategies.

Foreign Diplomats

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in London during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which have incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payment.

The total for 1987 (14,437) indicates a 35 per cent. reduction over the total 1986 figure (22,331) and is only 13 per cent. of the 1984 figure (108,845)—the last to be published before the introduction of our policy on parking by members of diplomatic missions in May 1985.

We welcome the further reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved during 1987 and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall, however, continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines, and bring pressure to bear on diplomatic missions to reduce this further.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were allegedly committed in 1987 by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity; and how many foreign diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in that year as a result of alleged offences.

Mr. Eggar: Forty-three alleged serious offences by persons entitled to immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1987. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the report of the Foreign Affairs Committee "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges" (1985) as offences falling into a category which could in certain circumstances attract a penalty of six months or more; I am advised that very few of the alleged offences would have been likely to attract a custodial sentence. The majority involve drinking and driving and shoplifting. Eighteen diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in 1987 following alleged offences.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Allowances

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of married couples who will stand to gain in 1990-91 from transferring the married couple's allowance to the wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 600,000 married couples are expected to benefit from transferring the married couple's allowance to the wife in 1990-91.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the value of income tax personal allowances has increased in real terms since 1979; how this amount has been distributed to each band of income taxpayers, both in total and in amount per taxpayer.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: With the increases announced in the 1988 Budget, the single and married man's personal allowances will have increased by 26·5 per cent. and 27·6 per cent; respectively, in real terms since 1978-79. The table shows the cost of these increases, including those for age allowances and the average reductions in income tax liability for single people and married couples at different levels of income. All estimates are provisional.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reductions in income tax liabilities, at 1988-89 income levels, of the proposed 1988-89 allowances, thresholds and rates, and comparable figures for the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1988-89 showing (a) the number of tax units, (b) the total amount of reductions and (c) the average reduction per tax unit for the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. of taxpayers and the bottom 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and 50 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The information is given in the table. I regret that information for the bottom 1 per cent. and the bottom 5 per cent. of taxpayers is not available. Child tax allowances, which were being phased out in 1978-79, have been excluded from the comparison. The estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Net Earnings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to 1988-89 the information on real net earnings provided in his reply of 10 April 1986 to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), Official Report, columns 193-4.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information on real net earnings and average rates of tax and national insurance contributions is in the tables.

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the gain to the Exchequer of taxing child benefit for taxpayers at the 40 per cent. tax rate in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue yield in 1988-89 from taxing child benefit at 40 per cent. for those married couples and single parents facing a marginal tax rate of 40 per cent. for that year is estimated to be about £140 million.

Walthamstow

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many top rate income tax payers there are in the Walthamstow constituency.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not available.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many BES schemes during each year of the scheme have sought to raise under £500,000, between £500,000 and £1 million, and between £1 million and £2 million.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is as follows:

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on setting a maximum acceptable annual loss to the Exchequer from mortgage tax relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government remain committed to mortgage interest relief in helping people acquire their own homes. But relief remains confined to loans up to the loan relief limit, which is fixed each year and is currently £30,000.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people applying for (a) one set of mortgage tax relief on a property, (b) two sets of mortgage tax relief on one property and (c) three or more sets of mortgage tax relief on a property in 1987-88 and the cost to the Exchequer of the tax relief on the mortgages in excess of one per property.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: In 1987-88 there are estimated to be a total of about 8·4 million tax units benefiting from mortgage interest relief. Although firm information is not available, it is tentatively estimated that about half a million of these tax units (excluding married couples) are involved in multiple borrower mortgages. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of this estimate between the number of tax units involved in mortgages with two unmarried sharers and those with more than two unmarried sharers.

The direct revenue cost in 1987-88 of the additional mortgage interest relief which is available to sharers is estimated to be of the order of £25 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the cost or saving to the Exchequer of (a) the changes to the mortgage tax relief given in the Budget and (b) limiting mortgage tax relief to £15,000 per person whether married or single.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The estimated yields arising in 1988-89 and 1989-90 from the changes to mortgage interest tax relief which were proposed in the Budget are:

£ million

	1988-89	1989-90
Mortgage interest relief ceiling applied to residence	negligible	+25
Abolition of tax relief on new home improvement loans	+80	+200
Abolition of tax relief on new loans for homes for dependent relatives and divorced or separated spouses	negligible	negligible

It is estimated that the direct revenue yield in 1988-89 of the restriction of mortgage interest relief to a loan of up to £15,000 per individual would be about £320 million. This estimate is based on the mortgage interest rate of 10·25 per cent. prevailing at the beginning of 1988-89 and on the assumption that the new ceiling would apply to both existing and new loans. No account has been taken of any consequential changes to the distribution of mortgages.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most up-to-date estimate available on the inflationary effects of mortgage tax relief on house prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: House prices are affected by a large number of factors including disposable income, the cost and availability of mortgage finance and changes in the number of households. I am not aware of any recent study which concentrates on the effect of mortgage interest relief.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most up-to-date estimate of the annual loss of revenue to the Exchequer as a result of mortgage tax relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost of mortgage tax relief in 1988-89 is estimated to be £4·25 billion. This estimate takes account of the recently announced reductions in the mortgage interest rate.

MIRAS

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the inclusion of housing co-operatives funded jointly by the housing corporation and a building society in the mortgage interest relief at source scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Loans to approved housing associations, including co-operatives, are already within the scope of the mortgage interest relief at source (MIRAS) scheme.

Disabled People's Homes (Tax Relief)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the withdrawal of tax relief on interest on loans to adapt houses occupied by disabled people.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A number of representations have been received on the subject of abolition of tax relief on interest on home improvement loans including several about its possible effect on homes occupied by disabled people.

VAT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any further information to add to that contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South, Official Report, 24 March, columns 195-6, relating to the proposals of the Commission of the European Economic Community for extension of value added tax to specific goods or services hitherto exempt, together with the expected consequential yields to Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Lilley: The hon. Member's previous question related specifically to zero rated, not exempt, items. The Commission has successfully challenged before the European Court the legal basis of the exemption of certain medical care goods. Of these, the only item with appreciable revenue implications is the supply of spectacles, where taxation at the standard rate of 15 per cent. would yield around £25 million per year.

Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing tax and national insurance contributions less child benefit, where appropriate, for 1988-89, and comparable figures for 1987-88 and 1978-79, with the multiples of average earnings as half, two thirds, one, five and 10 times for (a) a married couple, with part-time working spouse, (b) a married couple plus two children, with part-time working spouse and (c) a single person.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: Information on tax and national insurance contributions both at current prices and as a proportion of the appropriate multiple of average earnings is in the table.

The multiples of average earnings for single people and husbands are based on average earnings for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. For part-time working spouses, the level of earnings is the appropriate multiple of the average part-time wage for women recorded in the new earnings survey. The levels of earnings for 1988-89 are projections in accordance with the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions in paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987; the estimates for 1988-89 are therefore provisional.

Budget

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify the distribution of gains in the Budget from each item where tax changes were made at other than normal indexation, according to income bands as follows: less than £5,000 per year; £5,000 to £7,500; £7,500 to £10,000; £10,000 to £12,500; £12,500 to £15,000; £15,000 to £20,000; £20,000 to £30,000; £30,000 to £50,000; and above £50,000; and if he will indicate the percentage of total tax changes accruing to each group and the percentage of the total numbers of taxpayers that each group comprises.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The table shows the estimated change in income tax liability for individuals at 1988-89 levels of income resulting from the main Budget proposals compared with indexation of the 1987-88 income tax regime.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update, to take account of the 1988 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his reply of 21 October 1986, to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, columns 807-8.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West, Official Report, 25 January, columns 79-82, regarding income gains and losses from successive Budgets, in the light of his latest budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The information is in the tables. For each financial year shown, the tables compare the yield from the tax regime in that year with the 1978-79 tax regime. All the estimates are based on a provisional 1988-89 income base projected from the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and all tax regimes have been indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula. The comparisons therefore allow for budgetary changes in income tax since 1978-79 but not for changes in definition or any other factors which might affect the income base.

Note:
All information is in terms of tax units—that is married couples are counted as one and their incomes combined.
[1] Average gains are calculated by reference to the estimated number would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime; this number is some 1,100,000 greater than the numbers paying tax in 1987-88, some 900,000 in the income range below £5,000 and 200,000 in the range £5,000 to £10,000.

Income Tax and Personal Allowances

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the gain to taxpayers at less than half, half to three-quarters, three-quarters to one, one to one and a half, one and a half to two, two to three, three to five and five to 10 and more than 10 times average earnings from the 2p cut in income tax and the rise in personal allowances; if he will specify these bands in pound sterling per year at current earnings; how many taxpayers are in each of these bands; and what percentage of the total number of taxpayers each group comprises.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The table shows the total reductions in income tax liability for single people and married couples from the changes in personal allowances, the basic rate limit and the basic rate of income tax proposed in the 1988 Budget. The change in liability is in comparison with the 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89 levels. Incomes above the level corresponsing to five times average earnings have been combined into a single range to provide a more reliable estimate. Average earnings are those for full-time men in all occupations whose pay is unaffected by absence.

Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the savings in a full year at 1988-89 rates of restricting all allowances and reliefs to the standard rate of tax; and if he will provide a breakdown by category of allowance and relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The direct revenue cost at 1988-89 levels of income of allowing personal tax allowances at rates in excess of the basic rate of income tax is estimated to be about £700 million. Information on the similar cost of other income tax reliefs is available only in respect of mortgage interest, retirement annuity premiums, employee's superannuation contributions, the business expansion scheme, and donations to charities; in total it is about £630 million. Within this total is a cost of about £280 million for mortgage interest relief and about £100 million for retirement annuity premiums. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for the other individual reliefs. Nor is it possible to estimate precisely the combined yield from restricting these reliefs and personal allowances to the basic rate, but it is thought to be about £1,500 million. These estimates make no allowance for any possible behavioural effects if allowances and reliefs were to be restricted to the basic rate.

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the cost to the Exchequer in 1990-91 of allowing married couples the right to choose whether the husband or wife should have the married couple's allowance in their name; and if he will give the anticipated cost of the scheme as it is presently proposed;

(2) if he will estimate the number of married couples who would pay less tax under a system which permitted them to elect which partner receives the new married couple's allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 12 April 1988]: In 1990-91 it is estimated that some 20,000 married couples where the wife is liable at the higher rate and the husband at the basic rate would benefit if they were allowed to elect which partner should receive the new married couple's allowance. Such a provision would cost approximately £5 million more than the independent taxation proposals in the Budget. For income tax, the revenue cost of these proposals in 1990-91 (based on the existing distribution of income and capital between husbands and wives) is estimated to be about £500 million.

Taxpayers (Statistics)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the number of higher rate taxpayers in 1986-87 and 1987-88 living in each Scotland, England and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 April 1988]: For countries the latest estimates of the number of higher rate taxpayers (married couples and single people) are for 1985-86 and are as follows:

	Thousands
Scotland	76
England	849
Wales	28

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the number of higher rate taxpayers in 1986-87 and 1987-88 living in each parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 April 1988]: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the tax liability in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89 of a married couple where the husband is earning £23,000 a year, has the use of a 2300cc company car in which he does 2,400 miles on business annually, and makes £5,520 by sale of approved share options and where the wife earns £17,000 a year and has the use of a 1600cc company car in which she travels more than 2,500 miles annually, assuming that mortgage interest of £3,000 annually is paid by the husband and that the couple elect to be taxed separately on earned income.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The income tax and capital gains liabilities of the married couple in 1987-88 and 1988-89 would be:

	1987-88 £	£988-89 £
Income tax	9,587·25	9,331·75
Capital gains tax	0	208·00
Total	9,487·25	9,539·75

The income tax liabilities shown are based on the assumptions that the married couple have no other forms of income or reliefs, that both company cars are under four years old and have an original market value of under £19,250 and that the wife drives between 2,500 and 18,000 miles on business travel in the year. The capital gains tax liabilities assume the husband makes a gain of £5,520 on the disposal of shares acquired under an approved share option scheme, that the couple make no other gains or losses in the year and that there is no indexation relief.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give figures following the tax changes announced in the Budget for the income tax and social security contributions as a percentage of gross income for a married couple with no dependent children on (a) £11,000, (b) £50,000 and (c) £75,000 a year making the same assumptions as used in the Inland Revenue publication "International Comparisons of Direct Tax on Employment Income" published in December 1987;

(2) if he will give figures following the tax changes announced in the Budget for the income tax, tax and social security contributions less child benefit, as a percentage of gross income for a married couple with two dependent children on (a) £11,000, (b) £50,000, and (c) £75,000 a year making the same assumptions as used in the Inland Revenue publication "International Comparisons of Direct Tax on Employment Income" published in December 1987;

(3) if he will give figures following the tax changes announced in the Budget for the income tax and social security contributions as a percentage of gross income for a single person on (a) £11,000, (b) £50,000, and (c) £75,000 a year making the same assumptions as used in the Inland Revenue publication "International Comparisons of Direct Tax on Employment Income" published in December 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 21 April 1988]: The information is in the table.

Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions as a percentage of gross income, 1988-89

Annual earnings £	Single person per cent.	Married couple with no children per cent.	Married couple with two children[1] per cent.
11,000	28·1	24·7	17·8
50,000	35·0	33·8	32·3
75,000	36·6	35·9	34·8

[1] deducting child benefit.

The calculations assume that all income is earned income, that the wife has no earnings, and that there are no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance. National insurance contributions are at the standard class 1 rate for employees contracted-in to the state additional (earnings-related) pension scheme. Child benefit is deducted from income tax and national insurance contributions in the calculations for married couples with children takes into account cash benefits for children.

Political Parties

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the political parties are currently treated by the Inland Revenue as qualifying political parties for the purposes of section 24 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The political parties which currently qualify are:

Conservative
Labour
Labour and Co-operative Social and Liberal Democratic Social Democratic Scottish Nationalist
Plaid Cymru
Ulster Unionist
Democratic Unionist
Social Democratic and Labour

Budget (Gainers)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to establish a procedure for gainers from the recent Budget to refund part of their extra income to a public service of their own choosing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 April 1988]: No. Individuals are free to donate their own money to voluntary groups in areas where they would like to see extra spending; and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made tax relief available for payroll giving to charities in his 1986 Budget.

Pensions

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of the lack of prior notice to the pensions industry about the measures contained in clause 53 of the Finance Bill, he will issue a press notice stating whether he is considering any further change to pensions legislation before the 1 July implementation date for personal pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 April 1988]: All but one of the measures contained in clause 53 were announced on Budget day. But the proposal—which has been widely welcomed—to allow members of occupational schemes to contract-out of the state earnings-related pension scheme through a personal pension could not then be announced as it was still under discussion between my Department and the Department of Health and Social Security. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly be making consequential changes to social security regulations.

TRANSPORT

M1 Leagrave, Luton

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider the provision of a higher fence on the section of the M1 that passes through Leagrave, Luton, to counteract noise and pollution.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will consider the matter and then write to my hon. Friend.

InterCity

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the cost per mile of travel to InterCity rail users in 1987; and what was the cost in 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures for average fare per mile paid by InterCity passengers in the two years are as follows:

	Cash	1987 prices
1979	4·4p	7·9p
1987	7·9p	[1]7·9p

[1] provisional.

In real terms, fares were no higher in 1987 than 1979.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide comprehensive and updated information on the proposed test flights by jet propelled aircraft from London City airport; what is the significance for future use by aircraft not yet able to use the airport by virtue of planning restrictions of definition of, or adjustments to, the public safety zones referred to in Departmental letter XQ/26/08 of 19 April; what is the approximate extent of the public safety zones described by grid co-ordinates attached to the letter; and what assessment (a) the Civil Aviation Authority and (b) his Department have made of the routes now used to and from the airport to Paris since resumption of flying in 1988.

Mr. Channon: Questions about test flights from London City airport (LCY) should be addressed to its owners John Mowlem plc.

The public safety zones (PSZs) at LCY extend outwards in a funnel shape for 600 m. from the end of the runways. At the eastern end, the PSZ co-ordinates take account of both the present runway and its possible extension. If planning permission were granted for an extension, the runway could physically accommodate a wider variety of aircraft than now.

The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for aviation safety regulation including (with the Ministry of Defence) air traffic management. The authority remains of the view that each of the routes identified by its panel of inquiry for use between London City airport and Paris is suitable for that purpose.

Radioactive Materials (Security)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will initiate an investigation into the present arrangements covering the transport on commercial aeroplanes of radioactive materials, in terms of special security measures against terrorist attack or hijack of the aircraft;

(2) what discussions he has had with the International Civil Aviation Organisation over the air transport of radioactive materials under the United Nations recommendations for the transport of dangerous goods, section 7, in terms of special protective measures against terrorist attack or hijack;

(3) if he has had any recent discussions with the International Civil Aviation Organisation over the adequacy of physical protection measures against aircraft hijack in the transport of dangerous goods under United Nations recommendations class 1, explosives, 2, gases, 3, flammable liquids, 4, flammable solids, 5, oxidising substances, 6, poisonous substances, 8, corrosives, and 9, miscellaneous dangerous goods.

Mr. David Mitchell: The International Civil Aviation Organisation already lays down international standards and recommended practices for the safeguarding of international civil aviation against acts of unlawful interference: these embrace measures to counter hijacks and terrorist attacks on Civil aviation. The United Kingdom's civil aviation security programme reflects these international standards, tailored as necessary to meet specific threats applying to the United Kingdom. We shall continue to keep these and other security matters under review within the relevant international bodies, as appropriate.

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the Intertran and Radtran II computer codes developed by the International Atomic Energy Agency to model the radiological impact of the transport of nuclear materials.

Mr. David Mitchell: Intertran was developed from the American computer code Radtran-II by consultants working for the International Atomic Energy Agency. The safety and reliability directorate of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has undertaken work on the code on behalf of UKAEA and the Department of Transport.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many events were recorded in the periods (a) 1964 to 1983 and (b) 1984 to 1987, in the transport of radioactive materials that either exceeded or had the potential to exceed the radiological impact associated with normal transport conditions.

Mr. David Mitchell: (a) Forty-two events recorded during this period involved radiation levels greater than those associated with normal transport conditions. But only 10 of them caused significant doses to the workers concerned, mostly from badly packaged industrial radiography equipment.

(b) The information for this period is not yet available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the International Air Transport Authority over the current security measures to protect aircraft carrying radioactive materials from hijack.

Mr. David Mitchell: There have been no discussions with the International Air Transport Association (IATA). International development of civil aviation security standards is carried out by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. The European civil aviation conference considers questions of aviation security in Europe and makes recommendations to its members. It is open to IATA to make representations to those international bodies.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the International Atomic Energy Agency over security measures for the air, sea or land transport of radioactive materials and physical protection measures against terrorist attack or hijack.

Mr. David Mitchell: The International Atomic Energy Agency already lays down recommendations on the standards for the physical protection of radioactive materials during transportation, and these standards are observed by the industry.

ENERGY

British Gas

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many shareholders in British Gas did not pay the final instalment for their shares by the deadline on 26 April; and how much money was outstanding for these shares.

Mr. Parkinson: At close of business on 26 April payments from more than 97 per cent. of investors had already been processed, leaving some 80,000 to go. This represented 99 per cent. of the £1,590 million instalment value. Since 26 April payments have been arriving at the rate of roughly 10,000 a day. Payments are still being accepted but any investor who has not paid at this stage is running an increasing risk of losing his shares.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if Nirex has agreed to take responsibility for the disposal of radioactive wastes arising from the reprocessing of Swedish spent nuclear fuel currently stored at Sellafield.

Mr. Parkinson: Nirex is currently developing proposals for a deep repository for low and intermediate-level wastes. Acceptance of particular wastes will depend on contracts to be negotiated when a disposal facility is available. It is expected that Nirex will accept wastes arising from all United Kingdom sources, including Sellafield.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total volume of (a) low-level nuclear wastes, (b) intermediate-level nuclear wastes, (c) high-level nuclear wastes, (d) depleted uranium and (e) plutonium expected to arise from all contracts signed (i) before 1976 and (ii) since 1976 with Swedish companies for the storage and reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Parkinson: All BNFL's reprocessing contracts with Swedish companies for reprocessing at Sellafield were signed before 1976. The products that will be obtained from this reprocessing are estimated at:

(a) Low-level waste, 900 cubic metres.
(b) Intermediate-level waste, 140 cubic metres.
(c) High-level waste, 8 cubic metres.
(d) Uranium, 136 tonnes.
(e) Plutonium, 1 tonne.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the contracts signed before 1976 with Swedish companies for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel cover the management and disposal costs arising for low and intermediate-level nuclear wastes.

Mr. Parkinson: Contracts signed before 1976 with Swedish companies, in common with all contracts signed before 1976, for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel do not include options for the return of waste. All these contracts therefore cover the management and disposal costs in respect of the wastes arising from them.

Nuclear Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all current international civil nuclear research projects in which the United Kingdom has involvement either in direct co-operation with other states or through involvement via multinational bodies; what financial commitment has been made in each year since the United Kingdom co-operation began; and if he will make a statement on present prospects for each collaborative project.

Mr. Parkinson: United Kingdom bodies participate in the collaborative programmes of the International Atomic Energy Authority, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development/Nuclear Energy Agency, and Euratom. They also take part in a number of multinational and bilateral research projects. Details of this participation cannot be assembled without disproportionate cost.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what volumes of (a) low and (b) intermediate-level radioactive wastes are expected to arise from contracts currently signed for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant (THORP) at Sellafield; and what plans exist for the nuclear waste arising from these contracts.

Mr. Parkinson: The likely arisings from BNFL's existing THORP reprocessing contracts are:

(a) Low-level waste, 40,000 cubic metres.
(b) Intermediate-level waste, 6,000 cubic metres.

For wastes arising from pre-1976 contracts the low-level waste will be disposed of to Drigg and the intermediate-level waste will be sent to a United Kingdom repository. All post-1976 contracts include an option for the return of wastes, and we intend that this option should be exercised.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the contracts signed with (a) the Italian nuclear authorities and (b) the Japanese nuclear authorities for the management of spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield from the Latina and Tokai Mura magnox reactors, respectively, is designated to cover (i) the disposal of low and intermediate level wastes and (ii) high-level waste arising.

Mr. Parkinson: 60 per cent. of contracts for the management of spent nuclear fuel from Latina and 55 per cent. of the contracts for the management of spent nuclear fuel from Tokai Mura cover disposal in respect of the wastes arising. The remaining contracts were all signed after 1976 and include options for the return of wastes arising. The Government intend that these options should be exercised.

Coal Mining Subsidence Compensation

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the consultation document on the proposed legislation on coal mining subsidence compensation to be issued.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Energy has today issued a consultation document to interested parties. This sets out proposals for coalmining subsidence legislation following the publication on 29 October 1987 of the White Paper in reply to the Waddilove report on "The Repair and Compensation System for Coal Mining Subsidence" (Cm. 235).

Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

SOCIAL SERVICES

RAWP Levels

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage the RAWP levels of the Thames regional health authorities require to be uplifted to compensate for the treatment of acute patients in private hospitals.

Mr. Newton: I am not entirely clear what my hon. Friend has in mind; but the possibility of taking private provision into account in the RAWP formula was rejected on practical grounds in the interim report on the review of the RAWP formula published in December 1986.

NHS Budget

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the percentage of the National Health Service budget raised by (a) general taxation, (b) national insurance contributions and (c) charges in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

NHS Sources of Finance—Percentage of Total by Year

Operating Theatres

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on studies carried out on the usage of operating theatres in National Health Service hospitals by Peat Marwick McLintock; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that Peat Marwick McLintock has undertaken such studies on behalf of some health authorities. The studies were funded from the health authorities' resources since they dealt with problems identified locally. Any reports produced are confidential to the commissioning authority and are not released to the Department without their agreement. This is part of the professional relationship which exists between client and consultant.

Energy Saving

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the Treasury guidelines for contracts with energy management companies offering energy-saving investment to health service establishments on a shared energy-saving basis and financed by the private sector, have still not been issued to regional and district health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: The joint Treasury-Department of Energy guidelines on the use of contract energy management were issued to regional health authority treasurers on an informal basis in November 1987. The Department hopes to issue formal guidance on this subject as soon as possible.

Consultants

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of consultants in paediatric dentistry, by regional health authority for 1983 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information is set out in the table. Staffing of hospital departments is a matter for health authorities in the light of their plans for the development of services.

Residential Homes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year from 1979 to 1987 (a) the number of places in (i) private, (ii) voluntary and (iii) local authority residential homes for elderly people; (b) the number of places for elderly people in independent, voluntary and private, homes supported by supplementary benefit payments, (c) the total supplementary benefit expenditure in £million on supporting people in independent residential care for the elderly and (d) the average expenditure per person supported in independent residential care for the elderly.

Mrs. Currie: The available information on the number of places in residential care homes for elderly people is as follows:

England as at 31 March	Local Authority Homes	Voluntary Homes	Private Homes
1985	102,534	26,402	73,606
1986	101,466	25,566	86,925

Separate data on residential homes for elderly people only are not available prior to 1985. Further information on residential accommodation for elderly and younger disabled people for the years 1979-1986 is contained in the Department's publications "Residential Accommodation for the Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People Local Authority Supported Residents — RA/86/1" and "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People — RA/86/2", copies of which are available in the Library.

Separate information on supplementary benefit for people in independent residential care homes for elderly people has been available only since 1985. There were 35,200 claimants in such homes at May 1985, 48,900 at May 1986 and 61,600 at May 1987.

Separate information on total expenditure and average payments to people in these homes is not available. Figures relating to all supplementary benefit claimants in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes were published in "Public Support for Residential Care" (the report of a joint central and local government working party), a copy of which is in the Library. Comparable figures for May 1987 are 117,000 claimants, receiving average payments of £104·6 (at February 1986 prices) with a total expenditure of £671 million.

Family Credit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if full-time participants on the new adult training scheme who have one or more children will be eligible for family credit.

Mr. Scott: Participation in the new adult training programme will not satisfy the family credit qualifying condition of remunerative work. Family credit could be payable, however, if the trainee's partner worked for 24 hours a week or more.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list (a) the interval between each previous abortion performed for resident women in 1986 who have had (i) one, (ii) two, (iii) three, (iv) four or (v) five previous abortions, (b) the interval between each previous abortion performed for non-resident women in 1986 who have had (1) one, (2) two, (3) three, (4) four or (5) five previous abortions and (c) the ages of the women on the occasion of each abortion performed.

Mr. Newton: The abortion notification form asks for the number of previous abortions under the Abortion Act 1967 and the date of the last abortion, where applicable. There is no feasible method of linking notification forms in respect of women who have had more than one previous abortion. Thus, the only interval available is that between the current and previous abortion, and I regret that this can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Joan Chapman (Mobility Allowance)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the date by which a decision will be reached by the Department's mobility allowance unit at Norcross, Blackpool, in the case of Mrs. Joan Chapman of 16 Windsor Court, Lichfield, Staffordshire.

Mr. Scott: A decision was made, and Mrs. Chapman was notified of it, on 20 April.

Opren

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has given to the medical profession regarding the reasons for the withdrawal of Opren's product licence; and if advice was given on the side effects that were thought to be associated with the drug and the periods of time for which they might last.

Mr. Newton: All doctors and pharmacists were sent a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines following the suspension of the product licence for Opren on 4 August 1982, giving the reasons for this action and advice. The letter drew attention to the numbers and types of reaction associated with Opren which had been reported, but not their duration. A copy of the letter is in the Library.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek advice from his medical advisers as to whether there are any circumstances in which they would recommend that Opren be prescribed for individual patients now that its product licence has been withdrawn.

Mr. Newton: Individual doctors in consultation with their patients are best placed to decide what should be prescribed in individual cases.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis the sum of £5 million has been set aside for funding the Independent Living Fund in 1988-89; and what proportion of this sum he expects to be expended on (a) administration and (b) publicity.

Mr. Scott: The sum actually allocated to the Independent Living Fund will depend on the number of applicants meeting the eligibility criteria. The £5 million which has been set aside for the fund initially represents our estimate of the maximum likely expenditure by the fund. Administration costs will depend on the volume of applications received. The level of expenditure on publicity once the fund is operational will be a matter for the trustees.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether payments from the Independent Living Fund to individuals will be made on (a) a weekly or (b) a monthly basis.

Mr. Scott: The method and frequency of payments from the Independent Living Fund will be a matter for the trustees to determine.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what account he expects the trustees of the Independent Living Fund to take of regional variations in costs and prices when assessing the levels of payments from the fund.

Mr. Scott: In determining the level of payments from the Independent Living Fund I would expect the trustees to have regard to the actual cost to individual applicants of employing personal care or domestic assistance.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to give details of the campaign to publicise the Independent Living Fund; and what is his assessment of the current level of awareness of its existence amongst potential claimants.

Mr. Scott: We are proposing to mount a publicity campaign to coincide with the formal launch of the fund, and advertising consultants have been briefed to develop this. A press release was issued on 31 March giving an address for potential applicants and others interested in the fund to write to. To date some 100 inquiries from individuals, voluntary organisations and those professionally involved with disabled people have been received at this address.

In addition the role of the fund has been brought to the attention of the Department's regional organisation. I also understand that information about the fund is being circulated to all citizens' advice bureaux. The level of inquiries received at this early stage indicates that many potential applicants are already aware of the fund's existence and purpose.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what categories of people will be appointed as trustees of the Independent Living Fund; who will administer the fund on a day-to-day basis; and what qualifications they will have to assess individual claims for disablement benefit.

Mr. Scott: Those appointed as trustees of the Independent Living Fund will be chosen to represent a whole range of appropriate qualities and interests. In particular, they will include individuals with special knowledge and experience of disability, and people from England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. It is envisaged that the day-to-day administration of the fund will be delegated to the trust's administrative staff, acting according to the trustees' instructions. Borderline cases are likely to be referred to the trustees for guidance where necessary. I would expect the trustees and their staff to take appropriate professional advice on all cases. In addition, the Disablement Income Group and the Department will be available to advise the fund if required.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, columns 5-6, what right of appeal or review there will be in respect of decisions on applications for payments from the Independent Living Fund in the period before the trust is formally established; when he expects the trustees to be in a position to determine how to deal with cases which have been turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No payments can formally be made from the Independent Living Fund before its legal establishment. All applications addressed to the fund now will be examined by officials, with professional advice, and the case for interim payments considered. All applications will, however, be fully re-examined by the trustees when appointed, whether or not interim payments have been made.

Drug Licences

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what restrictions there are on the prescribing on a named person basis of a drug which has had its product licence withdrawn; if his Department or the Committee on Safety of Medicines is advised each time it occurs; and what warnings the prescribing doctor is obliged to give to the patient.

Mr. Newton: The Department places no restrictions on the prescribing of drugs by doctors on a named patient basis. Medical practitioners are responsible for treating and advising their patients. Neither the Department nor the Committee on Safety of Medicines is normally advised when a drug is prescribed on a named patient basis.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that whenever a drug licence is withdrawn, members of the medical profession are given the facts which led to its withdrawal so that they will be aware of the risks involved if they decide to prescribe it on a named person basis and the long-term side effects which may affect their patients.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 November 1987 at column 560.

Project 2000

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the Government's response to "Project 2000: A New Preparation for Practice" published by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The proposals have been the subject of extensive consultation, and we have been considering them in the light of it. We hope to respond to the UKCC shortly.

Nurses (Immunisation)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in regard to charging nurses for immunisation against hepatitis B and other diseases to which they may become exposed in the course of their work; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Immunisation against hepatitis B and other infectious diseases, which is offered for occupational health reasons to those in high risk groups, is provided free of charge.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what training facilities are available in the London area for mental handicap nurses (RNMH).

Mr. Newton: The schools of nursing which have approval to run ENB course 1200 RNMH, Registered Nurse for the Mentally Handicapped, in the London area are:

Waltham Forest.
Newham.
Enfield and Harringay.

There is a wide range of post-basic courses available to mental handicap nurses, as well as other in-service training. The hon. Member may wish to contact the regional chairmen concerned for further information.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department has given to district general managers and health regions to enable them to fulfil Government assurances about the long-term future for mental handicap nurses in the community care setting.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 16 March, at column 615.

"From Black to White"

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if all the treatment shown in the recent postgraduate dental video entitled "From Black to White" will be available through the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: All treatment necessary for dental fitness is available under the NHS general dental services. The scale of fees for general dental practitioners, which is reviewed annually in consultation with representatives of the dental profession, already includes payment for the treatment of the early signs of tooth decay using the techniques shown in the video. We will shortly be discussing with the profession whether any clarification of the description of this treatment in the scale is needed in the light of developments in clinical practice.

Dental Estimate Forms

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what arrangements he made to distribute the new dental estimate forms; and if he is satisfied that sufficient supplies of the new forms were available on the appropriate date;

(2) what arrangements he made to inform general dental practitioners of the changes consequent on the introduction of new dental estimate forms; if any special arrangements were made to inform dental receptionists about the use of these forms; if he issued any separate instructions on advising people on low incomes in their use, in particular in relation to form AG; and whether he has made any plans to issue advice to patients on the completing of these forms.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance concerning the revised procedures for remission of dental charges on grounds of low income which came into effect on 11 April, and supplies of the new estimate forms were sent well in advance of that date to each family practitioner committee for distribution to general dental practitioners. I have no reason to believe that practitioners did not receive them by 11 April. Practitioners are responsible for training their staff in new procedures. Advice on completion of form AG1 is contained in the form itself. The form also indicates where further information can be obtained.

Ross Lab (Product Licence)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the application about which the hon. Member for Macclesfield has written to him made by Ross Lab of Macclesfield for the issuing of a product licence in connection with blood transfusion equipment was first received by his Department; what stage that application has reached; when he expects the licence to be issued; what have been the reasons for the delay in processing the application; and if he will make a statement outlining what steps he is taking to establish the sources of information given to competitors of Ross Lab about the progress of the application.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information concerning the state of progress of applications for product licences made under the Medicines Act is regarded as confidential. Details will be given in the reply to the letter from my hon. Friend.

Lithotripters

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list by health district those health authorities which have a lithotripter, giving the cost of purchase and estimated annual running costs, together with how many people are treated on average each year, the date the machine was installed and the population of health districts where this equipment is sited.

Mrs. Currie: There are two types of lithotripter in current use in National Health Service hospitals. The first type, percutaneous lithotripters, are designed for invasive internal application in a normal operating theatre. These are relatively inexpensive devices which are in widespread use.

The second type, known as the extra corporeal shock wave lithotripter, is a complex and expensive machine which avoids the need for interventional surgery. Ministers have said that this type of lithotripsy should be a regional service. I am aware of five of these lithotripters in use so far within the National Health Service in England. These are located as follows:

The Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield
St. Peter's Hospital, London
St. Thomas's Hospital, London
Southmead Hospital, Bristol
Withington Hospital, Manchester

There are also facilities in Scotland, which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and in the private sector.

The detailed information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the health authorities concerned to obtain it.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total sum spent nationally on research into Alzheimer's disease during 1986-87 and 1987-88 and projected for 1988-89.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

The main agency through which the Government support medical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives a grant-in-aid from this Department.

I understand that in 1986-87, the last financial year for which figures are available, the Medical Research Council spent in the region of £3 million in its own establishments and through grants to universities on research related to Alzheimer's disease. Expenditure in 1987-88 and 1988-89 is likely to be at about the same level. Some expenditure is also incurred by universities from general funds.

Expenditure on research into Alzheimer's disease, funded directly and indirectly by the Health Departments for 1986-87, is about £70,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 3 May 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Civil Justice Review

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the civil justice review to be published, pursuant to his statement of 16 December, Official Report, column 1212.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor received the report of the civil justice review on 28 April. He has given instructions for the report to be printed and will present it to Parliament as soon as possible. It is expected that this will be early in June.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the light of his proposals to privatise the electricity supply industry, he will issue a direction to the Central Electricity Generating Board to withdraw all its formal applications for the construction of new power stations under section 2 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909, until such time as the future pattern of the industry has been settled.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Until new legislation is brought forward and passed by Parliament, the Central Electricity Generating Board continues to have a statutory obligation to supply. It therefore remains its responsibility to plan sufficient generating capacity to meet the need for electricity in England and Wales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Lesotho

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current development projects in Lesotho for which United Kingdom national, Commonwealth or European Community assistance is given and the value of that assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under the bilateral aid programme to Lesotho, Britain is currently financing the following projects at a total cost of £8·078 million:

Project	£ million
Village Water Supplies	1·475
Rural sanitation	0·223
Maseru sewerage	0·444
Maseru urban sanitation	0·588
Forestry	1·006
Government Computer Centre	0·530
National Development Corporation Line of Credit	1·126
Road Improvement Unit	2·624
Mabote Site and Services	0·034
Livestock Improvement Centres	0·028

In addition we expect to spend about £2·4 million in 1988-89 on technical co-operation activities. The Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation is currently funding with grants estimated at £153,000 a number of projects in Lesotho involving the provision of experts. Projects in Lesotho currently being financed by the European Community from the fifth and sixth European development funds are as follows:

	Total cost £ million
(a) Grants
Mekaling-Quthing road	6·76
Mohale's Hoek-Mekaling road	3·65
Mphaki Area Development II	2·55
Asparagus expansion scheme	3·28
Highlands water scheme	6·55
Manpower development programme	5·31
Levotholi Polytechnic	0·41
Lesotho Airways Corporation	1·48
Lesotho Customs services	0·09
Institute of Public Administration	0·31
Studies (irrigation, agricultural water supply, health, finance, vet services)	0·43
(b) Special loans
Mohale's Hoek-Mekaling road	6·07
Mekaling-Quthing road	0·35
(c) Risk Capital
Lesotho National Development Corporation	2·07
Highlands water scheme	2·41
	41·72

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom contributions to Lesotho through national, Commonwealth and European Community action in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure and the estimated British share of Commonwealth and European Community aid expenditure to Lesotho since 1983 have been as follows:

£000s

	1983	1984	1985	1986
United Kingdom bilateral aid	4,695	5,233	2,382	3,784
Estimated United Kingdom share of European Community aid	840	1,300	1,340	950
Estimated United Kingdom share of Commonwealth aid[1]	80	37	30	46

[1] Figures cover the period June-July.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to assist the Lesotho Government to strengthen their national economy and decrease their dependence on the economy of the Republic of South Africa;

(2) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the role of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference as an agency for diminishing Lesotho's economic dependence on the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: All our bilateral aid to Lesotho aims to strengthen the national economy. In addition we support the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which Lesotho is a member.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment is available to him of Lesotho's repayment of foreign debt; and to which countries repayment has not been made.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures in the table show the debt service payments which were due and estimates of the actual payments made on public and publicly guaranteed debt from 1984 to 1987. I am not aware of any countries which have failed to receive repayments due from Lesotho.

Debt Service Payments $US millions

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment is available to him on the level of economic growth in Lesotho in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: The rate of economic growth in Lesotho as measured by the estimated growth in the gross domestic product is as follows for each year since 1983.

Percentage growth rate of GDP

	Per cent.
1984	9·4
1985	3·8
1986	2·2
1987	2·8

Source: IMF Staff Papers.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the extent to which Lesotho has benefited from joining the Lomé convention and been given improved access to European Community markets.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the five years to 1990 Lesotho will get 41 million ecu (about £28 million) in planned aid from the European development fund, in addition to benefiting from SADCC and other regional projects. Lesotho also receives lending from the European Investment Bank, finance under the Stabex scheme, and emergency aid.

Under the Lomé convention, Lesotho's exports of its industrial products and the great majority of its agricultural products enter the Community free of tariff or other restrictions.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

London (Specialist and Support Services)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what feasibility studies were carried out before hand on the extent to which successor authorities to the Inner London education authority would be able to run specialist and support services and employ special advisers in the event of abolition.

Mrs. Rumbold: In putting forward their proposals, the Government took account of the fact that outer London and other metropolitan borough authorities maintain services such as those referred to by the hon. Member. Detailed discussions on such services will clarify any further work required to ensure continuity.

School Governors

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities which are providing training courses for school governors at public expense.

Mr. Dunn: A survey conducted recently on behalf of the Department suggested that most local education authorities provide some school governor training. Section 57 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 places on every local education authority to provide every school governor with such training as the authority considers necessary for the effective discharge of the governor's functions. This duty will take effect from 1 September 1988 for county and maintained special schools, and 1 September 1989 for voluntary schools.

Police-School Liaison

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken on the recommendations of the joint teachers' association, Police Federation working party report on police — school liaison.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government welcome co-operation between the teaching profession and the police as reflected in this report. Liaison between police and schools is important not only for education itself, but also for the prevention of crime and for maintaining the essential relationship of trust and confidence between the police and the public.

The report covers very similar grounds to that covered by a report produced jointly by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers in 1986. The Government circulated this report to all schools and police forces. Both the Home Office and the Department of Education and Science have worked in hand to identify and disseminate examples of good practice in police-schools liaison. The Home Office is financing a research project to evaluate the effectiveness of various methods of police-schools liaison and Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools has begun an examination of good practice in a number of local education authorities.

The arrangements for police-schools liaison need to be developed locally. We understand that since the publication of the 1986 report local working parties have been set up in many areas to develop joint police-schools programmes.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations are currently taking place with teachers and local education authorities on pay increases.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend wrote on 19 April to the local authority associations, the teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools setting out his proposal to implement the recommendations on pay rates of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions. This letter invited the consultees to say if they would like a meeting with him or with officials, such meetings to take place by 13 May. A number of such meetings have been arranged.

Education Expenditure (Kirklees)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the expenditure per pupil for primary and secondary schools in Kirklees metropolitan council area for each year from 1982 to the present date.

Mr. Dunn: The net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil by Kirklees local education authority in primary and secondary schools in the years 1981-82 to 1986-87, the latest date for which actual data is available, is set out in the table:

Expenditure[1] per pupil in Kirklees—1981-82 to 1986-87

	Primary £	Secondary £
1981-82	590	780
1982-83	650	855
1983-84	675	880
1984-85	720	960
1985-86	785	1,055
1986-87	875	1,250

[1] Net Institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

Note: All figures are in cash terms.

PRIME MINISTER

Advertising

Mr. Blair: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish a list of advertising contracts awarded by the Government in respect of the advertising programmes by the Government for the financial year 1987-88.

The Prime Minister: The following agencies were approved to work on the following campaigns contracted through the Central Office of Information for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish by Government Departments the latest estimate of expenditure on advertising for the financial years 1978-79 to 1987-88 and the forecast, if any, for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90, giving in each case a breakdown of advertising in (a) television and (b) elsewhere.

The Prime Minister: Information on publicity costs, including advertising, is not held centrally except where the expenditure incurred was through the Central Office of Information.

Expenditure on advertising for the year 1978-79 through COI on behalf of Government Departments was £18·8 million.

Details of departmental expenditure on publicity, including advertising, for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 were supplied by Ministers in response to questions from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and published in the Official Report November-December 1986, July 1987 and December 1987-January 1988.

Forecasts for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are a matter for individual Ministers and are not available centrally.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Prime Minister if the press offices of Government Departments are involved in the preparation of Government advertisements.

The Prime Minister: The deployment of staff in Government Departments is a matter for the Ministers in charge of the Departments.

Departmental Correspondence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of the leak inquiry relating to the exchange of information between Mr. Paul Gray of her private office and the office of the Secretary of State for the Environment, concerning the poll tax and housing benefit.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 14 March 1988 at column 425.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of the investigation into the unauthorised disclosure of a memorandum from her office to the Secretary of State for Scotland on the issue of opting out in Scottish school board legislation.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my reply of 15 April to the hon. Member at column 254.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister when the news media were informed of her intended visit to the Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children.

The Prime Minister: In the normal way, the press was informed shortly before the visit took place.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister why she did not inform the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras about her recent official visit to Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children; on what date the visit was decided upon; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is my consistent practice to inform any Member of a visit to his or her constituency shortly before the visit is due to take place. It has not, however, been my practice to do so when the visit is in the central London area. I have been hoping to visit Great Ormond street for some time.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the estimated cost to public funds of her visit to the Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children.

The Prime Minister: The costs of visits of this nature are not readily identifiable.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister why Her Majesty's Government have refused to fund fully the refurbishment of the Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government are planning to commit over £27 million to this scheme. It was agreed with the trustees at the outset that private funds would play a major part in the development. This is entirely consistent with Government policy and I welcome the generosity and commitment already shown by industry, commerce and the general public.

Strathclyde (Educational Changes)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between Professor Brian Griffiths and parents in Strathclyde about educational changes.

The Prime Minister: Professor Griffiths, the head of my policy unit, like the other members of the unit, meets a wide variety of people in the course of his work. It is not my normal practice to comment on any such specific discussions.

Rail Travel

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since May 1979 she has travelled by train while engaged on official business.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 14 April 1988 column 219. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West on 22 April 1988 column 583, I travelled by train in February 1987.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received regarding the changes in social security; and to how many she has replied to date.

The Prime Minister: I have received many such letters, from right hon. and hon. Members and others. Replies are sent as soon as possible. Some are transferred to the Department of Health and Social Security because they require details of personal cases and fall within the responsibility of that Department.

Office Staff

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants in her office are engaged on a regular basis in preparation for Prime Minister's Question Time.

The Prime Minister: A number of officials in my office are engaged in preparation for Question Time, in addition to their other responsibilities.

Civil Servants (Press Briefings)

Mr. John: To ask the Prime Minister if she will, pursuant to the answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 97, to the hon. Member for Pontypridd on the criteria governing civil servant press briefings, investigate the circumstances in which Mrs. Elizabeth Attridge and Mr. Grant Meaking of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food came to hold a press briefing on 21 April dealing with an Opposition research document, in the light of the criteria for the political neutrality of civil servants; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am advised that no such press briefing has taken place. If, during the course of briefings given for declared reasons, journalists ask for comments on criticisms of the Departments' handling of a particular matter, factual answers will be given.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Firms

14. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from small firms following the Budget proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Small firms have welcomed the changes announced recently in the Budget. In particular the reductions in rates of personal taxation represent a further encouragement to the strong and expanding small firms sector.

33. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: The small firms service, through its information and counselling arms, works to promote the growth of viable and profitable small businesses, and is increasingly developing its help to established businesses. In 1987-88, in England, it handled more than 266,000 inquiries and gave 39,138 counselling sessions. Inner city businesses are receiving extra help with the establishment in 1988 of six new inner city offices and the recruitment of specialist business advisers. The service's annual report for 1987-88 is planned for publication in the summer.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The latest estimates show that the employed labour force in Great Britain numbered 24,654,000 in December 1987. The employed labour force has now risen for 19 successive quarters, and by more than half a million in the last year alone.

19. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in unemployment since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: Between May 1979 and March 1988 the seasonally adjusted level of adult unemployment increased by 117 per cent. on a consistent basis. However, since July 1986 unemployment has been falling. It is now 2,504,800 the lowest figure since December 1981.

21. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in employment levels in the south-west since 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest estimates show that the civilian employed labour force in the south-west region increased by 121,000 between December 1983 and December 1987.

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the most recent percentage unemployment figure in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lee: The unemployment rate in the European Community was 10·4 per cent. seasonally adjusted, in February 1988.

28. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many more people are employed in East Anglia currently than in 1983.

Mr. Lee: By December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the civilian employed labour force in East Anglia had increased by 159,000 compared with December 1983. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

32. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the disparities between male and female unemployment in various parliamentary constituencies, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Daventry of 11 March, Official Report, column 371.

Mr. Lee: The level of both male and female unemployment varies with local labour market conditions, but the variations tend to be more marked among men than among women. Therefore, there are local variations in the ratios of female to male unemployment.

36. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present level of unemployment in the west midlands, and what was the figure 12 months ago.

38. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on levels of unemployment in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: On 10 March 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the west midlands region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers, was 254,800. This is a fall of 61,300 since March 1987 when the comparable figure was 316,000, nearly 20 per cent. lower.

40. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the comparable current unemployment levels in the United Kingdom and other Organisation for Economic Development and Co-operation countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Following is the information for all the Organisation for Economic Development and Co-operation countries for which standardised unemployment rates are available.

International unemployment rates[1], seasonally adjusted

[2] Harmonised unemployment rates published by the Statistical Office of the European Community.

43. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for unemployment throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: On 10 March 1988 seasonally adjusted adult unemployment in the United Kingdom was 2,504,800—a fall of 27,800 since February and the lowest figure, on a consistent basis, since December 1981.

46. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the ratio of unemployed claimants to unfilled vacancies in jobcentres, using current measurement criteria, in (a) May 1979 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Vacancy figures are not available, on a consistent basis, for May 1979. The earliest available figures, January 1980 are given in the table, together with the March 1988 figures. The figures are on a consistent basis with current definitions. It is not meaningful to calculate a ratio of unemployment claimants to unfilled vacancies at jobcentres, since only about a third of all vacancies in the economy are notified to jobcentres.

	United Kingdom
	January 1980	March 1988
Unfilled Vacancies (seasonally adjusted)	193,400	245,500
Unemployment Claimants (seasonally adjusted excluding school-leavers)	1,141,200	2,504,800

47. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to promote equal opportunities for the deaf in the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: All training agents and training managers in employment training will be required to have an effective equal opportunities policy. The individual assessment available to everyone in employment training will help to identify whether any additional help is needed for people who have hearing difficulties to enable them to participate fully in the programme. Depending on identified needs, extra assistance could include a communicator service, the loan of special equipment, and the possibility of a supplementary grant for training managers for higher cost training.

51. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the rate of the fall in unemployment in the last 12 months in Yorkshire and Humberside.

58. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of persons unemployed in Yorkshire and Humberside; and how this figure compares with the position 12 months ago.

Mr. Lee: In March 1988 seasonally adjusted adult unemployment in the Yorkshire and Humberside region was 243,400; a fall of 50,100, over 17 per cent. lower than a year ago.

56. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently in employment in the United Kingdom.

67. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on current trends in employment levels in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the employed labour force in the United Kingdom was 25,200,000. This is an increase of 501,000 since December 1986. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

61. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in the north-east region of England; what were the comparable figures 12 months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information is taken from the September 1984 census of employment. There were then 882,700 employees in employment, excluding self-employed people and members of Her Majesty's forces, in the north-east region of England. More comprehensive and up-to-date employment statistics can be provided for the standard economic regions. These show that in December 1987, the civilian employed labour force in the northern region was 1,209,000. The figure for 1986 was 1,193,000. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

63. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in south Yorkshire.

Mr. Lee: In March 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the county of South Yorkshire was 88,220, a fall of 13,930 or 13·6 per cent. since March 1987.

66. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed people there were in June 1983 and in March 1988; and what assessment he has made of their employment prospects for the next year.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures are analysed only by duration quarterly. On 14 January 1988 (the latest available date) the number of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in the United Kingdom was 1,100,615. The figure for July 1983 was 1,050,431. The comparison is affected by changes in the coverage of the count. Long-term unemployment has fallen by 234,000 over the last 12 months, the largest fall on record.

69. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of unemployment in the north-west; what was the comparable level 12 months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In March 1988, the level of seasonally-adjusted adult unemployment in the north-west region was 347,800, compared with 413,000 in March 1987, a fall of almost 16 per cent. over the last 12 months.

75. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the number of jobs lost in the Rotherham-Mexborough travel-to-work area during the last six months; what specifically is the number of jobs lost in the last few days at the Swinton glassworks; and what is the number of full-time vacancies at the present time.

Mr. John Lee: The information on jobs lost in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area, for the period requested, is not available.

Information given to the Department under the redundancy provisions of the Employment Protection Act 1975 and the redundancy provisions of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 is given in confidence and remains confidential until made public by the company concerned. On 4 March 1988 the number of full-time unfilled vacancies at jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area was 325.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

16. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Lee: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982, just over 333,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. 110,000 places will be available during the current year.

YTS

17. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of YTS.

Mr. Norman Fowler: Two-year YTS was introduced in April 1986 and the programme is now firmly established as the major route from school to work, providing training for around 60 per cent. of all 16 and 17-year-old entrants to the labour market. Three quarters of all young people leaving YTS go into a job, full-time education or further training.

25. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for YTS trainees going into work or further education and training.

Mr. Lee: The Manpower Services Commission conducts regular follow-up surveys of all YTS leavers. The latest results show that 75 per cent. of young people who left YTS schemes betweeen April 1986 and October 1987, were in work, further education or training at the time of the survey.

29. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently on YTS training schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of March 1988 the Manpower Services Commission management information system shows some 389,000 in training on YTS. This figure represents an impressive achievement in convincing young people the value of training. It also represents significant progress towards our objective that all young people under 18 years of age should have the opportunity either to continue in full-time education or of entering a period of work experience combined with work-related training and education.

73. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of YTS participants leave the scheme with a recognised qualification.

Mr. Cope: Until recently, as a result of the conversion to two-year YTS, 90 per cent. of leavers were early leavers and therefore not representative. Most young people will not have completed their two-year training programme until after March 1988. A national survey of those trainees who have stayed into their second year shows that 54 per cent. have already gained a qualification, and that a significantly higher proportion will have entered for a qualification by the end of their second year.

Channel Tunnel

18. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what forecast he has on the growth of inbound Channel tourism following the construction of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Numbers of visitors to this country from the rest of Europe have been rising, and in 1987 reached the record number of 9·3 million. While the opening of the Channel tunnel is bound to encourage further growth, it is not possible to forecast how many of the 15 million expected travellers using the tunnel in 1993—the first year of operation—will be incoming.

MSC Training Schemes

20. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently on Manpower Services Commission training schemes.

Mr. Fowler: In March 1988 there were some 390,000 young people on YTS and 30,000 people on the new job training scheme.

Single European Market

23. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress he has made in his assessment of the likely impact upon employment and registered unemployment of the completion of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Nicholls: This Department welcomes moves towards the completion of the single market. It is actively considering the likely effects of completion upon the United Kingdom labour market.

Business in the Community

24. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the target teams for the inner cities set up by Business in the Community.

Mr. Nicholls: This Department and the Manpower Services Commission welcome the formation of the eight inner city target teams and will continue to work closely with Business in the Community.

Disabled People (Travel and Tourism Course)

26. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there are any plans to expand the number of places on the travel and tourism course for the disabled sponsored by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lee: Manpower Services Commission-supported travel and tourism courses respond to local needs and as with their programmes for unemployed people generally, account is taken of the specific needs of disabled people locally.

The Manpower Services Commission's area office at Taunton currently supports a 14-place course in travel and tourism at the Hotel Careers Centre, Bournemouth. One of the trainees is a disabled person.

A further travel and tourism course is planned at Bournemouth. It will begin on 23 May, and offers a further 14 places.

Jobcentres

27. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were made at jobcentres concerning job vacancies in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We do not have precise information for 1987. However, I would expect the total to be broadly similar to the 19 million inquiries recorded in 1985-86, the last year for which comprehensive information is available.

Job Clubs

30. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of job clubs.

Mr. Lee: The job club programme has made significant progress over the last 18 months. At 31 March 1988 a total of 1,204 job clubs were open, compared with only 254 in October 1986. The number of people helped in 1986-87 was 25,695. In 1987-88 the number helped rose to 105,677 of which 57,080 (54 per cent.) went into jobs and a further 14,521 (14 per cent.) went into training, the community programme or enterprise allowance scheme.

Engineering (Higher Education)

31. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Engineering Council's proposals in its discussion document "Restructuring of Engineering Higher Education", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Cope: This Government welcome the discussion document as a focus for debate on this important area, and I have referred it to the Manpower Services Commission who will be commenting in the near future.

Tourism

34. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much Britain has received in European Community grants for tourism-related projects over the last three years.

Mr. Lee: Over the last three calendar years (1985 to 1987) tourism and tourism-related projects in England have received nearly £70 million in infrastructure grants from the European regional development fund.

39. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas visitors came to London in 1987; and how much they spent.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated by the London tourist board that there were 9 million overnight visits to London by overseas residents in 1987, spending £3·7 billion during the period they stayed in London.

65. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the relationship between tourism and jobs in rural areas.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board calculates that in 1986 a total of £3,000 million was spent by visitors to the countryside, with much of this revenue going to local shops, pubs, hotels, restaurants and attractions thereby helping to support rural jobs.

The English tourist board anticipates a growth in rural tourism of 20 to 25 per cent. by 1992 with jobs in rural areas also increasing.

Disabled People (Employment)

35. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to monitor the employment progress of disabled people, in particular through the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: A wide range of information will be collected on the identity and progress of participants in employment training including those separately identified as having a disability. Data will be available from their referral to a training agent for assessment and through the stages of action on the agreed training programme to their exit from employment training into a range of possible outcomes.

"Training for Employment"

37. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received following the publication of Cm. 316, "Training for Employment", and if he will make a statement.

62. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the White Paper "Training for Employment"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about our important and ambitious proposals contained in the White Paper "Training for Employment".

76. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the implications for deaf people of the White Paper "Training for Employment".

Mr. Nicholls: The new adult programme employment training will provide quality training for all eligible participants including those with hearing difficulties. All organisations participating in employment training will be required to have an effective equal opportunity policy. Trainees with hearing difficulties will have access to the full range of opportunities with, as necessary, additional help through a communicator service, loans for special equipment and the possibility of supplementary funding for training managers for parts of their training programme that would be particularly expensive.

Skill Shortages

41. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about proposals to deal with skill shortages.

Mr. Cope: The strength of our economy means that some employers are finding it more difficult to meet some of their skills needs through recruitment. Employers can improve the supply of skills they need by providing the proper incentives for individuals to acquire the right skills and experience and by stepping up investment in training.

We have given a lead by expanding our investment in training to around £3 billion in 1989-90 from £458 million in 1979-80. YTS guarantees up to two years' training for 16 and 17-year-old school leavers and the new £1·4 billion employment training programme will provide unemployed adults with the skills which today's jobs demand.

The Manpower Services Commission is also continuing to develop its programmes to encourage employers to recognise and meet their own training needs.

Training Commission

42. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Training Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State frequently meets the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission, which will be renamed the Training Commission subject to the Employment Bill 1988 receiving Royal Assent. He will, of course, continue to meet the commission chairman to discuss training issues.

Adult Training

44. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the development of the adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission is well advanced in its development work for employment training which is to be introduced from 5 September. MSC offficials will shortly be providing detailed information to existing providers and others interested in taking part.

74. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the special arrangements being made for disabled people and those with special needs under the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on Tuesday 29 March, Official Report, column 414.

78. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if special schemes for disabled people on the new adult training programme will be available at the assessment stage.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. The special help schemes for people with disabilities will be available at all stages of employment training, including the assessment stage.

School leavers

45. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers are expected to come onto the job market in each of the next five years; and how that compares with the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: It is projected that 510,000 school leavers in the academic year 1988-89 will be available for employment in Great Britain and that the corresponding numbers for the following two years will be 480,000 and 460,000. Projections for later years are not yet available. The latest year for which estimates are available is the 1984-85 academic year. An estimated 620,000 young people leaving school in that year were available for employment.

Self-employment

48. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have become self-employed since 1 January 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between December 1982 and December 1987 there was an estimated net increase of 727,000 in the number of self-employed people in Great Britain.

Hotels and Restaurants (Training)

49. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to encourage the success of the hotal and restaurant trainee placement scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of over 10,000 training placements for trainees in hotel and catering occupations is currently available under the YTS and the new job training scheme. The Hotel and Catering training board has expressed interest in increasing the number of training placements available to adult trainees by participating in employment training, which commences in September.

Enterprise in Higher Education

50. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the Manpower Services Commission's enterprise in higher education initiative.

Mr. Cope: I have been most encouraged by the amount of interest shown by institutions: 85 outline bids were received. Up to 10 projects will be selected for support in 1988-89.

Trade Union Reform

52. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on current Government plans for trade union reform.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Bill, which received its Third Reading in another place on 25 April, contains the Government's current proposals for changes in trade union law.

Unemployment Benefit Offices

53. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed in unemployment benefit offices at the present time; and how many were employed three years ago.

Mr. Lee: Staff employed in unemployment benefit offices are included with Department of Employment (DE) regional staff in our departmental staff record system. The staff in post figures for DE regional staff for 1 April 1988 and 1 April 1985 are as follows:

	Number
(i) Staff-in-post as at 1 April 1985	27,049
(ii) Staff-in-post as at 1 April 1988	28,546

Casual staff (usually taken on for a limited period to do a particular job) have not been included. And part-time staff have been counted as whole units. Figures differentiating between staff working in regional offices and those in unemployment benefit offices could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wages Council Orders

54. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions have been issued to jobcentres about advertising vacancies for jobs which are subject to wages council orders.

Mr. Lee: Jobcentres have instructions that, where vacancies are notified for occupations affected by wages orders. Rates must not be less than those specified. Staff are advised not to display vacancies offering wages below the minimum level and to consult the wages inspectorate in cases of doubt.

Health and Safety at Work

55. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to announce any new initiatives to improve health and safety at work.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission and its executive currently have a number of initiatives under way to improve health and safety at work. I expect the commission to submit proposals for future action to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State later this year.

70. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will undertake a review of the extent of employers' compliance with the requirement under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act to publish and keep up to date a safety policy for their firm.

Mr. Nicholls: No. I am satisfied that the inspection measures described in the reply I have to the hon. Member on Monday 18 January 1988, Official Report, column 509, are adequate to monitor the extent of compliance with this requirement.

Action for Cities

57. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received following the launching of the action for cities initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Since the launch of the action for cities programme on 7 March 1988 this Department and the Manpower Services Commission have been taking forward the various initiatives that were announced. There has been a high level of interest from the private sector in the new initiatives. A large number of inquiries have been received from companies, employer groups and other organisations about the schools-industry compacts initiative. A number of possible projects have been identified for potential support under the local enterprise agency project scheme. Support has also been expressed for the new small firms service office in Sheffield.

This interest is being sustained by the programme of action for cities working breakfasts, in which this Department is closely involved. These aim to stimulate further private sector involvement in inner city regeneration.

Restart Programme

59. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed have been offered help under the restart programme since its inception.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1985, some 3·5 million interviews have taken place under the restart programme, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help being made.

EC Internal Market (Social Dialogue)

60. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of meetings which have taken place between his Department and trade unions, as part of the social dialogue recommended by the European Commission in order to consider the implications of the creation of the EEC internal market by 1992.

Mr. Cope: There have been no such meetings between this Department and trade unions. The social dialogue consists of discussions between the two sides of industry and is currently conducted at a European level.

International Conferences

64. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is Britain's share of the world market for international conferences and association meetings.

Mr. Lee: In 1986 (the most recent year for which figures are available) Great Britain had 9 per cent. of the world market for international conferences and association meetings.

Factory Inspectorate

68. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the criteria in terms of size, equipment, number of employees and other factors, which determine whether the factory inspectorate visits a factory, and the interval between visits.

Mr. Nicholls: All factories registered with the Health and Safety Executive are subject to inspection, regardless of size, equipment and number of employees. The factors taken into account in determining when an inspector visits a factory include the factory inspectorate's system of priority assessment for preventive inspection, required remedial action following an earlier visit, an incident, a complaint, necessary special inquiries or a request for advice by the management. There is no fixed period between inspections.

Single Union Agreements

71. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to promote single union agreements in industry.

Mr. Nicholls: It is for individual employers to decide which unions, if any, they wish to recognise. This is not a matter in which the Government can usefully intervene.

Non-statutory Training Organisations

72. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions are being made, in light of recent critical reports, to improve non-statutory training organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 29 March 1988, Official Report, column 412.

Catering

77. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the numbers employed in the catering industry, broken down by the categories of hospitals, armed forces, school, institutional and industrial catering.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not available for the categories specified. The latest available information, which is for December 1987, is as follows:

	Employees in employment
Hotels and catering	1,077,000
Of which:
Restaurants, snack bars, cafes etc.	230,000
Public houses and bars	286,000
Night clubs and licensed clubs	155,000
Canteens and messes	136,000
Hotel trade	257,000
Other tourist etc. accommodation[1]	13,000

[1] This estimate is subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.
Note: The figures are unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Rowntree plc

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the employment implications of the bids by Jacobs Suchard and Nestlé Ltd. for Rowntree plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Under the Fair Trading Act 1972 the Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to advise my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether a merger or prospective merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation. The director general takes into account all matters which may raise questions of public interest including any likely significant employment effects of the merger or prospective merger.

Community Programme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions his Department has made for additional funding to be made available for those projects in the community programme which may be unable to generate the funding necessary to meet the costs of the management team salaries and running costs, following the changes in the Manpower Services Commission community programme due to come into force on 5 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The funding arrangements for employment training were set out in the White Paper "Training for Employment" (Cm. 316). Higher cost training places, including places on projects carried over from the community programme may attract a supplementary grant of up to £40 a week.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received concerning the impending changes in the Manpower Services Commission community programme criteria, due to take place on 5 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme and our other provision for unemployed adults will be replaced by employment training from 5 September. My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about these important proposals to provide quality training for longer-term unemployed people.

ACAS

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to receive the annual report of the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service.

Mr. Fowler: I have received the ACAS report for 1987, which will be laid before both Houses of Parliament tomorrow. The report is also to be published tomorrow and copies will then be available from the Vote Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Substitute Teachers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many substitute teachers were employed in primary schools in each of the education and library boards in Northern Ireland in each academic year from 1980-81 to 1987-88.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the full-time teacher equivalent based on the number of days for which salary was paid to substitute teachers in primary schools in the financial year 1987-88 (the only year for which figures are available) is as follows:

	Number
Belfast	105
North-Eastern	116
South-Eastern	109
Southern	125
Western	112

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of certificates of work completed in Housing Executive contracts were paid at the date due under the contract conditions during 1986-87; and how many payments were delayed beyond that date.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those recommendations of the Housing Executive committee set up as a result of the Rowland inquiry which have not yet been put into practice.

Mr. Needham: None.

Cross-border Police Investigations

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will raise in the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference the question of police investigations by the Garda Siochána and the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each other's jurisdiction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 28 April 1988]: We have regularly discussed a wide range of security matters in the Intergovernmental Conference, and will continue to do so. Details of proceedings are generally confidential, except as they are recorded in joint statements issued after each meeting.

Kincora Boys Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Mr. Peter Bell, currently working at the Northern Ireland Office, was interviewed in respect of any of the investigations into the Kincora boys home.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 25 February 1988 at column 322.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 22 April 1988]: The information is as follows:

Ministerial travel	35,282
Civil Servants	[1]1,946,799

[1] This figure includes some domestic travel costs by the Department of Economic Development.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British National Space Centre

Mr. Gerald Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is the current level of investment in the British National Space Centre and the space-related industry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the current investment through the European Space Agency in projects Polar Platform and Radarsat of the British Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British National Space Centre (BNSC) co-ordinates a civil space budget of some £120 million per annum. About £80 million of this is spent through the European Space Agency (ESA) on areas of activity in which United Kingdom companies and organisations participate. The remainder funds national and other programmes. The British space-related industry therefore benefits both directly and indirectly from the Government's total expenditure on civil space.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 18 April, at columns 350-51, to my hon. Friends the Members for Corby (Mr. Powell) and for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor), which gave details of the Government's investment in the ESA polar platform and the Canadian Radarsat.

Consarc Calcarb

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has authorised Consarc Calcarb to export equipment and technology necessary to manufacture fibrous carbon bonded thermal insulation to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is the Department's general practice not to comment on individual cases. No licences to export to the USSR such insulating material or the technology to manufacture it have been granted to any company since controls were introduced in November 1986.

Land Rover

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report column 436, he will state what criteria were used to establish the difference between military and paramilitary versions of the Land Rover and basic versions when considering export licence requirements for South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: All arms and other military and paramilitary equipment and appliances described in group I of part II of schedule I of the Export of Goods (Control)

Order 1987 (SI 1987 No. 2070) require a licence for export to any destination except as provided in article 4 of that order. This includes vehicles specially designed for military or paramilitary purposes, or incorporating features specially designed for such purposes.

Departmental Television Advertising

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total cost to public funds of (a) the current television advertising campaign for the single European market and (b) the current television advertising campaign for the enterprise initiative scheme.

Mr. Butcher: The estimated cost of the current DTI television advertising campaigns are as follows:

Single European Market	3·8 million
Enterprise Initiative	5·6 million

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total annual expenditure by his Department on television advertising campaigns, approved for broadcast by the IBA for each year since 1979 to the current financial year.

Mr. Butcher: The annual expenditure on TV advertising by the Department of Trade and Industry and its predecessor Departments since 1979-80 is as follows:

1979-80	—
1980-81	—
1981-82	—
1982-83	729,934
1983-84	192,486
1984-85	31,635
1985-86	—
1986-87	—
1987-88	5,570,016

Budget allocations for television advertising during 1988-89 are still under discussion.

Ariane V

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the funding of Ariane V projects in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received representations from a number of sources about funding of Ariane V projects in the United Kingdom.

Ariane V should provide a competitive satellite launcher in the mid-1990s to which the United Kingdom will have access. Our involvement in past Ariane development has been minor and the spin-off has not been exceptional. Launcher technology is outside the main thrust of our space strategy which is directed in the industrial field primarily at developing and exploiting the commercial potential of earth observation data.

Ariane V is an optional programme within the European Space Agency. For the United Kingdom participation is unlikely to yield returns commensurate with the heavy investment required. We have therefore decided to exercise our option not to take part in the Ariane V development programme.

Restrictive Trade Practices

Mr. Janman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on restrictive trade practices.

Mr. Maude: Fundamental reforms of the law on restrictive trade practices are proposed in the consultative document "Review of Restrictive Trade Practices Policy" (Cm. 331). This was laid before Parliament on 8 March, and I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on that date at column 114.

Factory Space

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the available vacant factory space in development areas in the north of England.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware that demand for factory space has increased very substantially over the past year in the assisted areas in the north of England, as in other areas, and that the amount of vacant space has declined. In the Government's view, it is for the private sector to respond to this increased demand wherever possible so that there is a return to a properly functioning property market. With this aim in view, English Estates has been asked to consider urgently what may be done both to get maximum benefit from its own resources and to encourage greater private sector provision. Its proposals are expected shortly.

Exports (Vietnam)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those companies exporting to Vietnam in the last three years, and the total value of their orders.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about individual company's export entries obtained by Her Majesty's Government in pursuance of their statutory powers is considered to be confidential. Total direct United Kingdom exports to Vietnam have been:

Year	£
1985	2·1 million
1986	1·3 million
1987	[1]2·6 million

[1] Provisional.

In addition, a considerable volume of indirect United Kingdom exports is believed to reach Vietnam, particularly via Hong Kong and Singapore.

Aerospace Exports

Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount of aerospace exports in the most recent completed year.

Mr. Alan Clark: Aerospace exports during 1987 totalled £5·6 billion.

Common Internal Market (Television Advertisement)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many computer manufacturers were invited to participate in developing the television advertisement on the common internal market; what were the criteria for choosing Mr. Alan Sugar; what was the cost of production of the advertisement and by which firm; what was the cost of television time for exhibition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Mr. Sugar is one of a number of nationally known business figures who have agreed to take part in a series of advertisements designed to underline to British business the crucial importance of preparing for the single European market. The question of invitations to other computer manufacturers does not arise.

The television advertisements are produced through the Central Office of Information by Terence Donovan Productions Ltd. The estimated cost of the current single European market television advertising is £3·8 million, of which some £3·5 million represents airtime costs.

European Community (Shareholders)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current situation regarding the conflict within European Community legislation with respect to the case for precedence of security considerations over the requirement to treat Community shareholders equally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Article 221 of the EEC treaty requires that member states accord nationals of other member states the same treatment as their own nationals as regards participation in the capital of companies or firms, without prejudice to the application of the other provisions of the treaty. One of the latter, article 223, enables any member state to take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions or war material.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number of companies which have advanced investment plans to claim regional development grant before the 31 March deadline; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is not known how many firms have advanced their investment plans in order to be eligible for assistance under the revised regional development grant scheme following the announcement of its closure. I can, however, say that my Department received about 6,700 applications for project approval after the date of announcement of termination of the scheme and by the 31 March deadline, compared with about 700 per month on average in the year to 31 December 1987.

Selective Assistance

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the specific guidelines to be issued on the type of investments which may qualify for selective assistance.

Mr. Atkins: The question has been interpreted as referring to regional selective assistance (RSA). In order to qualify for RSA, investment projects must create or safeguard employment in the assisted areas. They should have good prospects of achieving commercial viability so that the employment benefits are durable. They should also strengthen the regional and national economy; for example, by improving productivity, increasing exports or introducing new technology. Any adverse impact on employment in other firms is taken into account. Manufacturing and service sector firms may receive assistance, but service sector projects which serve only a local market do not generally qualify for RSA.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications he has received for regional development grants in the north-west (a) during the 11-week period after his announcement that grants would end and (b) during the previous financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Following the announcement of the termination of the revised regional development grant scheme on 12 January 1988, about 2,500 applications were received in the north-west by the 31 March deadline. In the financial year to 31 March 1987, 2,435 applications were received in the north-west. The equivalent figure for the calendar year to 31 December 1987 was 2,775.

Shipbuilding (Intervention Fund)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number of shipbuilding intervention fund subsidies paid under sixth directive rules in Great Britain in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: The sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding came into effect on 1 January 1987. Since then, the following offers of assistance have been made to shipyards in Great Britain:

		Number and Type of Vessel
I	British Shipbuilders
(i)	Appledore Ferguson Shipbuilders Ltd.	1 Dredger 1 Ferry
II	Private Sector
(i)	Cochrane Shipbuilders Ltd.	2 Tugs 1 Product Tanker
(ii)	Richard Dunston (Hessle) Ltd.	1 Tug
(iii)	Fairey Marinteknik (UK) Ltd.	1 Ferry
(iv)	McTay Marine	1 Fishing Boat
(v)	Richards (Shipbuilders) Ltd.	1 Fishing Boat

Rowntree plc

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider a reference to the Office of Fair Trading for possible anti-competitive practices if either of the two bids for Rowntree plc by Jacobs Suchard and Nestle Ltd. should succeed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to advise my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether a merger qualifying under the Act should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers commission for further investigation. My right hon. and noble Friend will make his decision whether to refer qualifying merger proposals, or mergers, involving Rowntree in the light of the director general's advice.

Chlorofluorohydrocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give figures for the amount of funding granted to private industry by his Department to assist in the development of alternatives to chlorofluorohydrocarbons for each year since 1980 for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement about future funding.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has given no such funding, nor does it have any plans to make any available specifically for this purpose in the future. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 20 April at column 440.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of new scientific evidence, including that published on 15 March by the International Ozone Trends Panel, he will now require labelling of aerosol products to indicate whether they contain chlorofluorohydrocarbons as propellants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 17 March at column 647.

Single European Market

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what his Department is expecting to spend on promotion of the single European market in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Secretary of State has announced the start of a five-year campaign to underline to British businesses the importance of the single European market. The first phase of the campaign is expected to cost some £5 million. The level of future expenditure in this and subsequent years will depend on the way business responds to this crucial challenge.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any information on the amount of money to be spent on the promotion of the single European market by the European Commission in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have no details of the sums which the Commission is spending for this purpose.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on any grants from the European Commission to organisations within the United Kingdom to promote the single European market.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no information on any grants of this kind.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the amount being spent on the promotion of the single European market by other European Economic Community members; and if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the amounts in (a) European currency unit, (b) European currency unit per head of population and (c) as a percentage of growth national product for each year for which he has the available information.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of member states have launched or are preparing major awareness campaigns on the single market. We have no details of the budgets which they are making available for this purpose.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has made any assessment of which sectors of the economy are (a) well placed and (b) badly placed to improve their trade balance with the rest of the European Economic Community following the creating of the single European market.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 25 April at column 45.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library copies of the brief given to advertising agencies bidding for the account to handle the promotion of the single European market.

Mr. Alan Clark: Advertising agencies working on Government accounts are appointed through the Central Office of Information which also provides the account brief. I understand that it is not the practice to publish such briefs.

"Action for Cities"

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many inquiries have been received on the "Action for Cities" telephone inquiry line.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Up to 29 April, 495 inquiries were received from businesses and approximately 400 from other sources.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the capital programmes for the national engineering laboratory at East Kilbride, for each year since 1979 in actual and real terms and the projected capital programmes.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 29 April 1988]: A detailed breakdown of the full economic cost of the programmes since 1979 is attached at table 1. They were funded partly by industry but mainly by Government.

Table 2 gives the same figures converted to 1987 values using the index of manufacturing costs, which seems the most appropriate conversion. (Table 3 gives the index used, taken from the wholesale price indices for manufactured products excluding food, drink and tobacco.)

Table 4 gives the projected spends on research programmes for the years 1988-92 according to the corporate plan approved by the laboratory's supervisory board. The figures are grouped into the five major headings of flow measurement, fluids and heat (including biotechnology), structures, materials and engineering systems. The corporate plan may be changed in the light of the forthcoming departmental review of all the DTI research establishments announced in the White Paper "DTI the department for Enterprise (Cm. 278)" of January 1988.

BSC

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he received the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the British Steel Corporation; and when he intends to publish it.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The report was delivered to the Secretary of State in 1986. The delay in publication has been caused by the need to consider very carefully a request by the British Steel Corporation that the Secretary of State should exercise his powers under section 17 of the Competition Act 1980 to make a number of excisions to the published report in order to avoid prejudicing the interests of the corporation. We shall publish the report as soon as possible.

VR Shipping

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps were taken by his Department to ensure the creditworthiness of VR Shipping before the contract for 24 ferries was underwritten by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Before the contracts for the 24 ferries were underwritten by ECGD the full standard investigations were carried out as regards the financial standing of VR Shipping and the provision of appropriate collateral security.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the ability of the Danish company VR Shipping to pay for the 24 ferries it ordered from NESL (a) at the time of signature of the contract and (b) now.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The answer to the previous question refers to the ability of VR Shipping to pay for the ferries at the time of signature of the contracts. As my right hon. and learned Friend reported to the House on 18 April, the contracts are currently in dispute pending the outcome of which the payment situation is unclear.

Department for Enterprise Campaign

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library copies of the brief given to advertising agencies bidding for the department for Enterprise campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Advertising agencies working on Government accounts are appointed through the Central Office of Information which also provides the account brief. COI regards briefs inviting tenders from contractors as confidential commercial invitation and I see no reason to invite it to publish such briefs.

SCOTLAND

Drift Netting

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is yet able to publish the number of salmon and sea trout caught in river drift nets in the river Tweed for 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Drift net fishing for salmon and sea trout is unlawful in the river Tweed.

Rateable Values

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the average increases in rateable value that will result from the commercial revaluation due in Scotland in 1990 for each rating authority in Scotland;

(2) if he will break down the expected increases in rateable value into districts, towns and parts of towns within each rating area and show deviations expected from the average figures for each area.

Mr. Lang: No estimates are yet available of the likely average increases in rateable value at the 1990 non-domestic revaluation in Scotland. The assessor for each valuation area is required to provide, by 1 November 1989, to the relevant rating authorities and to the Secretary of State an estimate of the rateable valuation in 1990 of each district or island area, and the detailed information requested will not be held centrally.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish estimates of the commercial rates to be levied in Scotland under the proposed unified business rate system.

Mr. Lang: It would be premature to consider the preparation of such estimates until non-domestic property north and south of the border is valued for rating purposes on a comparable basis.

Rating Reform

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost to public funds of the Government advertising campaign on the poll tax carried out by the agency Ogilvy and Mather in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The expenditure by my Department on the public information campaign on the community charge including the production and household distribution of the recent booklet, has been £480,566.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide for imprisonment for wilful refusal to pay the poll tax in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to make the community charges registration officers answerable to him on questions of the compilation of the register and the notice given to responsible persons.

Mr. Lang: No.

Licensing Law

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in the light of responses to the 1986 consultation paper on Scottish licensing law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: More than 2,000 representations were received in response to the 1986 consultation paper. These are currently being analysed and decisions about what, if any, action might follow thereon will be taken when the analysis is complete.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to publish the contents of submissions made to him in response to the 1986 consultation paper on licensing law; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Except where respondents have requested confidentially, replies, comments and representations received in response to the 1986 document have been placed on public file which is open to inspection by appointment at St. Andrew's house.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce his conclusions on the current review of licensing legislation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Replies to the 1986 consultation paper are currently being analysed, and the Government's conclusions will be announced when that analysis is complete.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to allow licensing boards in Scotland to consider an application for a regular extension at the same board meeting as an application for a permanent transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is being considered along with other possible amendments to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 in the context of our current review of liquor licensing legislation.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many unemployed males over the age of 50 years and out of work for more than one year there are in the city of Glasgow;

(2) how many unemployed females over the age of 50 years and out of work for more than one year there are in the city of Glasgow;

(3) how many unemployed males over the age of 50 years and out of work for more than one year there are in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency.

(4) how many unemployed females over the age of 50 years and out of work for more than one year there are in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency.

Mr. Lang: The information requested as at the latest available date is shown in the table.

Claimants unemployed for more than one year, aged 50 and over on 14 January 1988

	Males	Females
City of Glasgow district	5,893	1,501
Glasgow, Pollok constituency	537	121

This information is available in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much in money terms, real terms and as a real term percentage local authority expenditure on the provision of accommodation for the homeless had changed in each year since 1979 (a) in Scotland and (b) in the city of Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to identify centrally expenditure incurred by local authorities in meeting the needs of the homeless.

Social Work Departments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the prospects for filling vacancies in social work posts in Strathclyde, Lothian, Tayside, Borders, Central, Fife, Dumfries, Galloway, Grampian, Highland, Shetlands, Western Isles and Orkney social work departments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information of this kind is not held centrally.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the outturn or estimated outturn total of rate support grant paid to local authorities in Scotland in total in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

1979-80	1,194,800,000
1980-81	1,451,000,000
1981-82	1,512,300,000
1982-83	1,633,100,000
1983-84	1,718,250,000
1984-85	1,670,870,312
1985-86	1,704,059,747
1986-87	1,656,162,143
1987-88	1,777,322,740

Note:
The figures given for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 are estimates based on the latest expenditure returns submitted by local authorities.

Hospital Services

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the costs incurred for each health board staff time and other records in respect and work connected with competition tendering for hospital services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proposals there are for monitoring procedures to be carried out by health boards following the award of contracts for cleaning and domestic services for in-house to private contractors;

(2) what instructions he has given to health boards in respect of the inclusion of Whitley council rates of pay as a condition in tender documents to be issued to private contractors; and if he will place a copy of any such instruction in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Guidance was issued with the Scottish Home and Health Department's letter of 11 December 1987 a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of any companies which have expressed an interest in tendering for (a) domestic and (b) catering services in hospitals, for local health boards in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 8 March to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish).

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the whole-time equivalent staffing numbers for each health board in (a) catering services and (b) domestic services as at (i) 31 March 1982, (ii) 31 March 1983, (iii) 31 March 1987, (iv) 31 December 1987 and (v) 31 March 1988.

Mr. Forsyth: Centrally held manpower statistics for the NHS in Scotland are up-dated twice a year at 31 March and 30 September. The most recent figures available relate to 30 September 1987. The tables set out the information requested showing operational staff and managerial staff separately.

Local Authority Services

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the original financial thresholds specified for each category of work for which local authorities were required to seek competitive tenders in the Local Government, Planning and Land (Scotland), Act 1980, (b) the dates on which these original thresholds became effective, (c) the date on which these thresholds were subsequently amended and (d) the revised financial thresholds specified for each category of works on each occasion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Act in question is, in fact, the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. The information requested is shown in the table.

Category of work	Level of threshold from 1 April 1982	Level of threshold from 1 April 1984
General road works	Jobs with an individual value of more than £100,000.	Jobs with an individual value of more than £50,000.
		Jobs amounting to £50,000 or less in excess of 70 per cent. by value of the total of such work in the previous financial year (whether undertaken by contractor or DLO).[1]
General water and sewerage works	Jobs with an individual value of more than £50,000.	No change
New construction works	Jobs with an individual value of more than £50,000.	No change
	Jobs amounting to £50,000 or less if award of the work to the DLO would result in the DLO having carried out in that financial year at least two thirds of the aggregate value of similar work which it carried out in the previous year.	Jobs amounting to £50,000 or less in excess of 40 per cent. by value of the total of such work in the previous financial year (whether undertaken by contractor or DLO).

Category of work	Level of threshold from 1 April 1982	Level of threshold from 1 April 1984
Maintenance work	Jobs with an individual value of more than £10,000.	No change. Jobs amounting to £10,000 or less in excess of either 40 per cent. by value of the total of such work in the previous financial year (whether undertaken by contractor or DLO) or £300,000, whichever is the higher.[2]

[1] Subject to transitional arrangements for 1984-85 only under which, for jobs amounting to £50,000 or less, up to 90 per cent. of the amount of such work undertaken by the DLO in the previous financial year could be awarded to the DLO without competition provided this was more than 70 per cent. of the total of such work commissioned by the authority in that year.

[2] Subject to transitional arrangements for 1984-85 only under which, for jobs amounting to £10,000 or less, up to 80 per cent. of the amount of such work undertaken by the DLO in the previous financial year could be awarded to the DLO without competition provided this was more than 40 per cent. of the total of such work commissioned by the authority in that year.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the actual housing account capital expenditure for every Scottish district and island local authority in each of the years since 1980-81, broken down into (a) net allocations and (b) net receipts and shown in actual and 1987-88 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible providing the most closely related information that is readily available centrally.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the overall operating deficit on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the financial year 1986-87 there was a surplus of revenue over operating costs of £702,050.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to (a) end or (b) increase tolls on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department is currently reviewing toll levels at the Bridge.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he plans to take concerning the finances of the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department is currently pursuing a number of initiatives to reduce operating costs at the bridge including the recent transfer of responsibility for routine maintenance to Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest accumulated debt on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The accumulated deficiency at 31 March 1987 was £63,259,983.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to write off the accumulated debt on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are keeping the question of the accumulated debt on the Erskine bridge under review.

Education Reform

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he estimates will be the budget for a school board with (a) up to 500 pupils, (b) up to 1,000 pupils and (c) more than 1,000 pupils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the terms of the School Boards (Scotland) Bill it will be for education authorities, after discussion with the school boards concerned, to set budgets for their school boards. The size of the school may have some effect on the budget for a school board; a more significant variable would be the range of additional delegated functions, if any, which the board concerned had taken on.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify, in detail, how his estimate of £5 million for the cost of running school boards was arrived at.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's estimate of the net additional cost to education authorities of the initial implementation of the school boards system was made on a national basis. It was based on information about the existing school councils system and on the cost of governing bodies under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 in England and Wales.

Road Humps

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is considering giving authorisation to any roads authorities in Scotland to use road humps in their area for a trial period.

Lord James Douglas- Hamilton: Consultations are under way with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on the possible introduction of the road hump provisions of the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984 in one or more regions.

Dogs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to bring Scottish legislation into line with English legislation concerning the fouling of pavements by dogs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend plans to consult on this and other issues arising from a review of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 later this year. In doing so, he will take into account measures to combat the fouling of public places by dogs which are being pursued with apparent success in some areas of England.

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if usual vehicle speeds are included in the criteria used to judge when a road requires a pelican crossing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Vehicle speeds are one of the considerations discussed in some detail in the Scottish Development Department technical memorandum SH 7/87, which was issued by the chief road engineer to regional and islands councils.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the criteria used to decide when a road requires a pelican crossing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The relevant regulations are the Pelican Pedestrian Crossing Regulations and General Directions 1987. The criteria used in determining when a pelican crossing may be installed are contained in the associated Scottish Development Department circular No. 2/87.

School Entrances (Road Markings)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to give legal force to road markings at school entrances.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local authorities to decide whether to use the road markings as prescribed in the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1981 and also to decide what, if any, associated restrictions should be incorporated in a traffic regulation order. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in the light of local authorities' budgets and rates for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Local authorities in Scotland have budgeted to spend £136 million or 3·8 per cent. over guidelines in 1988-89 and have determined rates which will, on average, increase domestic rate bills by 5·2 per cent. I am pleased that the realistic provision and grant which I have made has resulted in many authorities setting their rates at a reasonable level, but I am disappointed that so many authorities have still ignored warnings about overspending.

I am particularly concerned at the problems facing ratepayers in the areas of those authorities which are planning the most substantial expenditure excess. As a result, I have decided to initiate action in terms of section 5 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1966 in respect of Lothian regional council, on the grounds that its planned expenditure for 1988-89 is excessive and unreasonable. A letter has today been sent to Lothian region proposing a rate reduction of 5·6p, and inviting it to make representations about the proposed reduction.

I am giving further consideration to whether the planned expenditure of any district council is excessive and unreasonable. I am also reflecting on appropriate grant penalties for overspending authorities in the light of views expressed to me last Friday by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. I will make a further announcement on these matters soon.

Teachers (Superannuation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will amend the teachers' superannuation scheme so that women teachers have the same right as male teachers to pass on to their spouse on death, benefit rights and entitlements accrued in respect of contributions paid prior to 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish teachers' superannuation scheme is being amended to introduce widowers' benefits in respect of service undertaken by women teachers from 6 April 1988. The Social Security Act 1986 requires that, for service from this date, a widower will become entitled to a restricted pension of one half of the minimum pension of his spouse guaranteed for the purposes of contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme. However, after consultation with teachers' associations and employers, it has been agreed that, in respect of service after 6 April 1988, the teachers' scheme will go further than the statutory requirement and will provide widowers' benefits on the same basis as those currently available to widows. In order to cover service prior to that date it will be necessary, however, for those women teachers, who so choose, to make appropriate payments. This is because the contributions already paid do not reflect the cost of giving such a substantial improvement.

DEFENCE

Soviet Aircraft (Interceptions)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of Soviet aircraft intercepted per week by RAF aircraft in the United Kingdom air defence region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is as follows:

Average number of interceptions by the RAF of Soviet aircraft per week

Year	Average
1979	4-5
1980	4-5
1981	3-4
1982	3-4
1983	2-3
1984	2-3
1985	3-4
1986	3-4
1987	2-3

US Maritime Pre-positioning Ships

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any request has been received from the United State authorities for the provision of port or anchorage facilities for United States maritime pre-positioning ships.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Discussions on the possibility of providing port or anchorage facilities for United States pre-positioning ships are taking place on a confidential basis but no decision has yet been taken.

COD, Donnington

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the full report of the internal inquiry into the 1983 fire at COD, Donnington.

Mr. Freeman: No, because of the need to maintain the confidentiality of board of inquiry proceedings. It would be contrary to established practice, as reflected in the Queen's regulations for the Army, to release the full report of a board of inquiry. I have, however, provided the hon. Member with a copy of a Ministry of Defence statement on the findings of the board of inquiry into the 1983 fire at COD Donnington and have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

REME (West Germany)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the production hours worked by REME workshops in West Germany, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: There is no readily available comprehensive record of production hours worked by all REME workshops in West Germany and it would entail disproportionate effort to obtain it. However, the number of production hours worked at each of the two base workshops over the last five years is as follows:

Year	23 Base Workshop	37 Rhine Workshop
1987-88	1,518,920	515,213
1986-87	1,555,577	528,767
1985-86	1,500,505	528,661
1984-85	1,570,592	543,392
1983-84	1,575,479	541,652

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much spare production capacity there was in the REME workshops in West Germany, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: It would require an extensive, lengthy and detailed examination to establish the extent of spare production capacity, if any, throughout the REME workshop organisation in BAOR over the last five years, which would entail disproportionate effort.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any production time at the REME workshops in West Germany was lost due to illicit production, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The only centrally-recorded cases of the misuse of REME production capacity for unofficial purposes over the last five years arose in 1986-87. There were two cases. According to the assessment made in the course of the SIB investigations, the total production time involved was 266 hours. Information on any minor cases which may have arisen over the last five years is not held in central records and it would entail disproportionate effort to obtain it.

Army (Dismissals)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers and privates have been dismissed from the Army; for the irregular use of military facilities, fraud or similar cases in each of the last five years; and what were the sums involved in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The table gives details of dismissals from the Army on conviction for fraud. I regret that the remaining information that the hon. Gentleman requested is not available:

Dismissed from the Army

	Privates	NCOs

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers and privates dismissed from the Army for irregular use of military facilities, fraud or similar offences have received ex gratia payment on their dismissal in each of the last five years; and what were the amounts involved in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Personnel dismissed from the armed forces do not receive ex-gratia payments. Since July 1984 they would normally be awarded the basic rate of pension and terminal grant to which they are entitled by virtue of their rank and length of service.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers and privates dismissed from the Army for the irregular use of military facilities, fraud or similar offences have received an Army pension in each of the last five years; and what were the amounts of fraud involved in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Detailed information regarding pensions received by soldiers dismissed from the Army for the irregular use of military facilities, fraud, or similar offences is not readily available. However since July 1984 soldiers dismissed for such offences have been awarded the basic rate of pension benefits which they have earned by virtue of their rank and length of service.

Courts Martial

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers and privates have been court martialled for the irregular use of military facilities, fraud or similar offences in each of the last five years; and what were the sums involved in the offences in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The table gives details of court martial convictions for fraud. I regret that the remaining information that the hon. Gentleman has requested is not available:

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 20 April to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, Official Report, column 500-1, if he will indicate the sections of the Firearms Act 1968 and the clause in the Firearms (Amendment) Bill to which he had regard in stating his Department's understanding of the expression class of firearm.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The term "class" appears in both section 2(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 and in clauses 1 and 7 of the Firearms (Amendment) Bill. My Department also understands and accepts all other descriptions of firearms contained within these documents.

Sonic Booms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sonic booms have been reported over land areas of the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; and how many of these were caused by military aircraft.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Central records of reported alleged sonic booms are not maintained.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lesotho

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to, or received from, the Lesotho Government with regard to Lesotho's relations with the Republic of South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to, or received from, the Government of the Republic of South Africa with regard to the Republic of South Africa's relations with Lesotho.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African Government are aware of our view that they should co-operate peacefully with all their neighbours, and refrain from the use of force.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the Republic of South Africa's policy towards Lesotho.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to urge South Africa to co-operate peacefully with all its neighbours and to refrain from the use of force.

Jose Pardo (Impounding)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the impounding of the Peruvian ship, the Jose Pardo in the Huskissonn dock in Liverpool; and what action he proposes to take to ensure that the crew still with the ship can return home to Peru.

Mr. Eggar: The Peruvian ship El Presidente Jose Pardo impounded in Liverpool on the instruction of the Admiralty Marshal on 30 October 1987 against debts incurred by the vessel's owners, the state-owned Peruvian company, Compania Peruanas de Vapores (Peruvian Steamship Company).

The repatriation of the crew, who are free to leave whenever they wish, is the responsibility of the Peruvian authorities. The Peruvian embassy confirmed on 29 April that the owner's agents in Liverpool have paid the crew's salaries and are arranging for their repatriation. The future of the Jose Pardo is for the owners and court to decide.

Extradition

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, following the speech in Derbyshire on 22 April, Her Majesty's Government have received any indication from Dublin of progress in resolving differences over extradition; and if he will make a statement in the context of that speech.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Irish are fully aware of our views on the need for effective extradition procedures. We hope that there will be an early resolution of the current difficulties.

Intergovernmental Organisations

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list in the Official Report the intergovernmental organisations, excluding the European Communities, of which the United Kingdom is a member, the amount of the United Kingdom's annual contribution to each organisation, the percentage of each organisation's budget which this represents and which Government Department accounts for each contribution.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1988, c. 312]: I should have said,

"I shall reply as soon as possible."

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what general principles are applied by Her Majesty's Government in determining the level of United Kingdom contributions to intergovernmental organisations; whether the United Kingdom consults other countries about its budgetary policy with respect to these organisations; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The policy of this Government is identical to that of their predecessors; namely, to meet our obligations to international organisations in full and on time. Assessed United Kingdom contributions are usually determined by reference to a pre-set scale of assessment which varies from one organisation to another. Voluntary contributions are determined by the Minister concerned.

For the international financial institutions, such as the World Bank Group, the regional development banks and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, we seek equitable burden sharing in the capital stock of each institution and in the soft fund replenishments.

Budgetary matters are discussed with other countries as appropriate.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has set aside public funds for an explanatory advertising campaign on the introduction of the poll tax in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: Provision was made in the public expenditure estimates for 1988-89 for expenditure on information on the community charge and uniform business rate to be made available after Royal Assent to the Local Government Finance Bill, but no decisions have yet been taken on the form or cost of any such expenditure.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities are now able to lease offices to accommodate staff for poll tax; and what conditions will have to be fulfilled for such leases not to count as prescribed expenditure.

Mr. Ridley: Local authorities do not require my consent to acquire accommodation, of whatever tenure, to be used for the purposes of any of their functions. The acquisition of a leasehold interest in office accommodation will entail prescribed expenditure unless paragraph 3(1) of schedule 3 to the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) (Consolidation and Amendment) Regulations 1987 as amended by the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) (Amendment) Regulations 1988 applies to the acquisition. The amount of prescribed expenditure is laid down in section 80 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and, subject to Parliament's approval to the Local Government Finance Bill, clauses 129 and 130 (first Lords print) of that Bill.

Lead Pollution

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations have been carried out by his Department on the dangers of lead pollution in areas adjacent to motorways.

Mr. Moynihan: In January 1986 the Government reduced the maximum permitted lead content of petrol by almost two thirds and all new petrol-driven cars will be required to run on lead-free petrol from October 1990. Studies have been carried out by the Department to monitor the effectiveness of the legislation. They have shown a substantial decrease in air lead concentration throughout the country (average 53 per cent., motorway location 54 per cent.) and the levels found are well below the EEC limit value. Average blood lead concentrations measured in 1986 in adults living near a large motorway interchange and in children attending schools alongside busy main roads were also low.

Water Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of water authority expenditure is utilised for the monitoring and effective biological control of British waterways; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much money was spent by water authorities for the last financial year available on the treatment of sewage; and what proportion of their overall budget this amounts to;

(3) what information he has as to how much was spent by the Yorkshire water authority in 1987-88 for the treatment of sewage; and what proportion of overall expenditure it amounts to.

Mr. Moynihan: The income and expenditure of the water authorities in England and Wales was set out in their annual reports and accounts for 1986-87 which were laid before Parliament on 15 July 1987. This information is summarised in "Water Facts" published annually by the Water Authorities Association. Copies of these documents are available in the Library. Outturn information about 1987-88 will be laid before Parliament in July.

Fly Tipping

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many prosecutions were brought against illegal fly tippers in Greater London during the last 12 months period for which figures are available; and what were the figures for similar periods during the preceding five years.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department that the most recent available information held centrally about prosecutions in the Metropolitan police area under section 2 of the Refuse Disposal Amenity Act 1978 and section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 is as set out in the table.

	Prosecutions
1984	66
1985	53
1986	70

Prosecutions under section 3 of the 1974 Act include those for the breach of licence conditions as well as those for the unlicensed deposit of waste. This information may, however, be incomplete. Information for earlier years is not readily available.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to allow prosecutions to be taken against employers or vehicle owners in cases of illegal fly tipping.

Mr. Moynihan: The prosecution of the employers of fly-tippers is already possible where it can be shown that they caused or permitted the fly tipping offence to take place. I am considering the possibility of making the registered owner of a vehicle used for fly-tipping liable to prosecution as part of the review of waste disposal legislation.

Local Authorities (Equities)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to which local authorities are investing balances and so on in equities; and if he will state in each case the political control of the authority, the value of the investment and the source of this information.

Mr. Ridley: Information on the value of equities held by individual local authorities is not collected by my Department.

Local Authorities (Capital Programmes)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his announcement on 25 April,

Official Report, columns 101-2, if he will make it his policy to lay before Parliament reports about the granting of additional allocations as a means of relaxing the capital controls, citing individual authorities, individual projects and their values; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Individual capital allocations have on many occasions hitherto been issued to individual local authorities for particular projects or purposes. Information about those likely to be of particular interest has been provided either in response to questions or through the Library. I am not persuaded of the need for more formal reporting arrangements.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he plans to give local authorities on capital programmes in the light of his statements on 9 March, Official Report, columns 325-36, and 25 April, Official Report, columns 101-2; and when such advice will be available.

Mr. Ridley: Copies of both statements and of the regulations made on 9 March and the new clauses added to the Local Government Finance Bill have already been circulated to all local authorities in England to which part VIII of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 applies. Representatives of local authorities have asked my Department to issue a circular containing guidance on the interpretation of the regulations and new clauses and amplifying the criteria which I proposed on 25 April, Official Report, columns 103-4. I will consider what advice can properly be given, after the current consultations have taken place.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his announcement about relaxations in the local authority capital control system, Official Report, 25 April, column 102, what percentage of the schemes made aware to him, after his announcement of 9 March, will be allowed to proceed by virtue of the relaxations; and what is his estimate of the value (a) of the schemes made aware to him after 9 March which were affected by his statement and (b) of the schemes of which he has knowledge that will be allowed to proceed and in respect of which he will grant additional allocations.

Mr. Ridley: I announced on 25 April certain criteria against which I would consider requests for additional capital allocations. Many of the representations which I have received since my statement of 9 March did not quantify the value of the schemes concerned or provide sufficient particulars for them to be judged against the criteria.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the changes made to the rules governing local authority capital expenditure since 1980.

Mr. Ridley: The present system for the control of local authority capital expenditure is contained in part VIII of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, which took effect from 1 April 1981, and prescribed expenditure regulations made thereunder. The original regulations made in 1981 have been amended by further prescribed expenditure regulations made in 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1988. In addition, amendments relating to deferred purchase were made by the Local Government Act 1987 and consequential regulations. Further amendments stand to be made under the Local Government Finance Bill.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the outturn or estimated outturn total of rate support grant paid to local authorities, within each standard economic region, in total, in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-89.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as follows:

Methyl Chloroform and Carbon Tetrachloride

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the consumption and production of methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the European Economic Community, (c) the United States of America and (d) the rest of the world for each year since 1980 for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: Figures for United Kingdom production of methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride are commercially confidential; figures for United Kingdom consumption are not available. European Community figures for production and consumption are not available. Following are available figures of estimated world and USA use since 1980; production figures are not available;

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the contribution of methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride to the depletion of stratospheric ozone.

Mr. Moynihan: Methyl chloroform has a low ozone-depleting potential as it tends to decompose before reaching the stratosphere. Carbon tetrachloride has a relatively high ozone-depleting potential, but most of what is produced is not emitted as it is used primarily as an intermediate in the production of CFC11 and CFC12. There is, therefore, considerable uncertainty about how much of these gases reach the stratosphere but current estimates suggest that each could contribute about 7 per cent. to the potential depletion of the ozone layer from man-made sources.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 495, he will state what proposals Her Majesty's Government will make at the meeting of the Environment Council on 16 June regarding implementation of the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Moynihan: The Commission has put forward a proposed regulation for the implementation of the protocol in the European Community. It is too early to judge how far this will have progressed by the time of the Environment Council on 16 June but the United Kingdom will continue to press for early agreement on Communitywide action.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 494, he expects the European Community member states simultaneously to ratify the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Moynihan: The aim is that the European Community and its member states should ratify the Montreal protocol simultaneously before the end of 1988.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cubic metres of intermediate level radioactive waste are stored in (a) Sellafield and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ridley: A total of 28,200 cu m of intermediate level radioactive waste is stored at Sellafield and 13,600 cu m elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Rural Areas (Assistance)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to increase the effectiveness of the Government's policies for assisting rural areas.

Mrs. Roe: On 1 April the Development Commission merged with its main agency, the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas (COSIRA) under the title of the Rural Development Commission. The staff and activities of COSIRA have been transferred to the commission and now form its small business service. The commission will continue to be the principal instrument for carrying forward the Government's policies for diversifying rural enterprise and will now have the added advantage of being in direct contact with private firms in rural areas.

CIVIL SERVICE

Outside Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many Crown servants have left to take up outside appointments, by year from 1979; from what Government Departments; and what grades were involved.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally. However, I refer the hon. Member to the statistical report prepared by the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) entitled "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown servants — 1987", copies of which I placed in the Library of the House on 10 March 1988. This contains most of the information requested covering particularly the years 1980 to 1987 inclusive.

Security (Vetting)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will provide details of the vetting procedures applied to non-Civil Service staff employed by outside contractors who undertake security duties at Government establishments.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: It is the responsibility of individual Government Departments to ensure the suitability of any private company and its employees for work on their behalf. It would not be appropriate to give details of the steps taken to do so.

WALES

Job Creation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the jobs associated with the regional development grant applications currently being considered by his Department are new jobs; and how many are safeguarded jobs.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am pleased to confirm that all the jobs involved in the 1,935 applications being processed from the beginning of this month are new jobs for I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman must be aware that regional development grants take account only of new jobs created directly in the activities to which the project relates.

Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up breast cancer screening units in each of the health authority areas in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Our aim is to extend the breast screening service to all parts of Wales by 1990. In view of the low population density of much of the Principality many areas are likely to be served by mobile screening units.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of employees in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales in employment in (i) May 1979 and (ii) May 1987, and the total number of employees in manufacturing industry standard industrial classification 2-4 in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Available data are as follows:

PPA and Nursery Schooling

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate the cash spent on (a) PPA and (b) nursery schooling in Wales in 1986-87 and 1987-88; if he proposes to give extra cash to PPAs in Wales; if he proposes to make available extra cash for nursery schooling in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: PPA Wales has been receiving grant aid from the Department towards its administrative and headquarters costs for a number of years. The organisation received £118,500 in 1986-87 and £122,997 in 1987-88. The level of grant aid in 1988-89 has yet to be decided.

Total current expenditure on the nursery and primary sectors combined was £249·8 million in 1986-87 and £273·8 million in 1987-88. Separate information on nursery schooling is not collected. It is for LEAs to determine their own priorities within the resources available to them.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the outturn or estimated outturn total of rate support grant paid to local authorities in Wales, in total, in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given as follows:

	£ million
1979-80[1]	589·9
1980-81[1]	693·4
1981-82[1]	745·3
1982-83[1]	797·8
1983-84[1]	812·0
1984-85[1]	815·4
1985-86[1]	837·0
1986-87[2]	882·1
1987-88[3]	937·1

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he calculates to be the average per capita income tax saving per week for British taxpayers who currently pay tax at a marginal rate of 60 per cent., as a result of his Budget proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The average reduction in income tax liability in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income for taxpayers whose marginal rate would have been 60 per cent. under the 1987-88 regime indexed to 1988-89 is estimated to be £190 per week.

Take-home Pay

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate how, in detail, he has arrived at the figure of 27½ per cent. as the rise in real take-home pay for a married man with two children on average earnings between 1978-79 and 1988-89, as given in response to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 14 April, Official Report, column 339.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The detailed calculations are in the table.

The earnings figures are derived from the new earnings survey series for full-time males on adult rates, whose pay was not affected by absence. The 1978-79 figure has been adjusted to take account of a change in definition of the series in 1983. The 1988-89 figure has been projected from 1986-87 using the assumptions of a 7½ per cent. increase between 1986-87 and 1987-88 and a 6½ per cent. increase between 1987-88 and 1988-89, as provided to the Government Actuary and reported in chapter 3 of the autumn statement 1987.

The retail prices index for 1978-79 has been rebased to 13 January 1987 = 100, the base of the current RPI series. The RPI is assumed to rise by 4 per cent. between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Calculation of real take home pay for a married man with two children on average earnings

Central Office of Information

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff have been employed in the Central Office of Information for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is as follows:

1 January	Permanent staff in-post (including part-timers)
1979	1,163
1980	1,177
1981	1,158
1982	1,071
1983	969
1984	961
1985	925
1986	878
1987	815
1988	804

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the rules on Government advertising under which the Central Office of Information operates.

Mr. Lilley: The conventions on central Government publicity and advertising are set out in the Government's evidence submitted to the Widdicombe inquiry in 1985 and deposited in the Library of the House (published as annex D to "Local Authority Publicity: interim report of the Committee of Inquiry into the Conduct of Local Authority Business chaired by Mr. David Widdicombe QC").

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the budget for the Central Office of Information for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88; and how much of that budget was expended on advertising and how much on other Central Office of Information activities.

Mr. Peter Lilley [holding answer 28 April 1988]: The information is as follows:

Year	Total expenditure £	Advertising expenditure £	Other expenditure £
1978-79	35,400,000	18,800,000	16,600,000
1979-80	40,700,000	20,600,000	20,100,000
1980-81	45,100,000	20,000,000	25,100,000
1981-82	46,100,000	18,500,000	27,600,000
1982-83	48,300,000	18,800,000	29,500,000
1983-84	60,300,000	21,300,000	39,000,000
1984-85	64,700,000	21,900,000	42,800,000
1985-86	66,900,000	25,100,000	41,800,000
1986-87	149,800,000	98,500,000	51,300,000
1987-88[1]	150,400,000	88,000,000	62,400,000

[1] Figures given are an estimate.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times the Government Actuary has uplifted the life expectancy of adult males and females since 1958.

Mr. Brooke: The Government Actuary's department has calculated the life expectancy of adults in the United Kingdom on the basis of current mortality rates about 30 times since 1958 for publication in the Central Statistical Office's "Annual Abstract of Statistics." In addition, the Government Actuary has made a projection of life expectancy on about 25 occasions since 1958 for the purpose of the national population projections. On almost every occasion life expectancies have shown increases for both men and women.

EC (Budget Council)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Luxembourg on 28 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached agreement on the expenditure provisions of its second reading draft budget. In response to the Italian delegation, however, who entered a waiting reserve on the content of the intergovernmental agreement (IGA) needed to finance the budget, the President of the Council did not declare the new draft budget formally established.

In its discussions on the European Parliament's modifications and amendments to the first reading draft budget established on 7 March, the Council agreed on total expenditure of 45·1 billion ecu (becu) (£31·3 billion) in commitment appropriations and 43·6 becu (£30·3 billion) in payment appropriations. Within these totals provision for agricultural guarantee expenditure remains, as in the Council's first reading draft budget, at 27·5 becu (£19·1 billion) with a further 1·24 becu (£0·9 billion) for disposals of existing stocks and a monetary reserve of 1 becu (£0·7 billion).

As regards non-compulsory expenditure, the Council agreed on figures of 11·4 becu (£7·9 billion) for commitment appropriations and 10 becu (£6·9 billion) for payment appropriations. The increases over 1987 are 10·5 per cent. and 8·1 per cent., respectively, compared with corresponding figures in the first reading draft budget of 7 per cent. and 5·9 per cent. and with the "maximum rate" of increase, calculated in accordance with the treaty, of 7·4 per cent. The European Parliament will have the right under the treaty to add the remainder of its half maximum rate margin to these amounts (some 27 mecu (£19 million) for commitments and 144 mecu (£100 million) for payments).

The Council agreed that the IGA total and the contributions of individual member states would be adjusted automatically so as to conform with the payments due under the Community's new own resources decision as finally agreed. The Italian delegation made clear that in the discussions on this decision they would continue to argue for an interpretation of the Brussels European Council conclusions which was more favourable to Italy than that proposed by the Commission.

The presidency asked the Italian delegation to resolve the matter of their waiting reserve by 4 May, which is the day before the deadline under article 203(5) of the treaty for the Council to act on the Parliament's modifications and amendments. I will keep the House informed about the outcome.

Government Securities

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are holding (a) 3·5 per cent. War Loan, and (b) all undated Government securities.

Mr. Lilley: There are approximately 459,000 holdings of undated Government securities on all registers. Of these, approximately 335,700 are of 3·5 per cent. war loan. It is impossible without undue cost to distinguish between personal and corporate holdings.

Pensions (RPI Error)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are being made for donations to public service charities following the understatement of the retail prices index and its implications for centrally administered public service pensions.

Mr. Brooke: The total saving attributable to the retail prices index error in the superannuation schemes for civil servants, teachers, NHS staff, members of the armed forces and overseas pensioners is about £7·2 million.

This sum is being paid in donations to charities supporting needy or retired personnel in those services by the responsible Departments. The office of the Minister for the Civil Service has already made payments of about £0·4 million to Civil Service charities in the financial year 1987-88. The remaining donations to Civil Service and other public service charities will be made in this financial year and next.

The charities will include:

Civil Service
- Civil Service Retirement Fellowship
- Civil Service Benevolent Fund
- Civil Service Sports Council
- Civil Service Club
- Civil Service Pensioners' Alliance
- Post Office and Civil Service Sanatorium Society
- Occupational Pension Advisory Service

Teachers (England and Wales)
- Teachers' Benevolent Fund
- Church Schoolmasters' and Schoolmistresses' Benevolent Institution

Scottish Teachers
- Educational Institute of Scotland Benevolent Fund
- Scottish Secondary Teachers' Benevolent Fund

Armed Forces
- King George's Fund for Sailors
- Army Benevolent Fund
- RAF Benevolent Fund

Overseas Service Pensioners
- Overseas Pensioners' Benevolent Society
- Staines Trust
- Sudan Government Pensioners' Supplementation Fund

Fuller information will be available on request from the Departments concerned once their detailed arrangements are complete.

For National Health Service staff, there is at present no national charity on the scale desirable for so large a public service. The Government are therefore taking this opportunity of consulting staff and management interests on the possibility of establishing a National Health Service benevolent fund which would be registered as a charity, managed on voluntary lines, and given a substantial initial endowment from public funds.

Tax Units

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax units will be on incomes, including unearned income, in excess of £50,000, £70,000 and £100,000 in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 April 1988]: In 1988-89 it is estimated that 230,000 tax units (married couples and single people) will have total income of over £50,000 and that 100,000 tax units will have income of over £70,000. I regret that a reliable estimate of the number of tax units with income of over £100,000 per year is not available as estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. All estimates are provisional.

Government Establishments (Security Arrangements)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list those Government establishments which are currently examining putting out to tender the security functions where those functions are currently undertaken by Civil Service staff;

(2) if he will list all the Government establishments where the security functions are undertaken by outside contractors, and the names of those contractors.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 29 April 1988]: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, since records of the security arrangements in Government establishments are not held centrally.

VAT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proposed rate of value added tax which the Commission of the European Communities proposes to be applied in the United Kingdom to proceeds from the gifts in kind to charities, including proceeds from retail sales; what is the approximate range of annual revenue he would expect to receive at the proposed or current United Kingdom relevant rate from such a tax; what was the date at which such a proposal was first made known to him; what consultations he has had with, and what information he has provided to, the principal charities concerned; what is the response of Her Majesty's Government to this proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The Commission's tax approximation proposals (published in August 1987) would require charity shops to charge VAT on donated goods sold retail. The rate (standard 14-20 per cent. or reduced 4-9 per cent.) would depend on the goods sold. Donations of goods by private individuals would not be affected, as these are outside the scope of the tax. I regret that information which might enable us to estimate the likely revenue yield is not held centrally.

I have received no representations from charities on this subject.

The Government's position, which has been repeated on numerous occasions, is that we are not prepared to accept proposals which would restrict our ability to apply VAT zero rates. Our position is safeguarded because changes to EC tax law require unanimity.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink farms are currently in operation in each county and region, respectively, in England; and what were the equivalent figures 12 months ago.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Mink farms (premises) in operation in England by MAFF Region and County or former County

Region and County	As at 24 March 1987	As at 24 March 1988
Northern	14	15
Humberside	4	4
Northumberland	1	1
North Yorkshire	1	1
Former county of South Yorkshire	1	1
Former county of West Yorkshire	7	8
Midlands and West	13	17
Cheshire	2	2
Lancashire	10	14
Staffordshire	1	1
Eastern	4	7
Hertfordshire	0	1
Lincolnshire	1	1
Norfolk	1	2
Suffolk	2	3
South Eastern	6	6
Buckinghamshire	1	1
Hampshire	2	2
Isle of Wight	1	1
Kent	1	1
West Sussex	1	1
South Western	8	8
Cornwall	4	4
Dorset	1	1
Gloucestershire	1	1
Wiltshire	2	2

I regret that numbers of mink farm licences and licensed farms given in reply to the hon. Member's previous questions on 24 March, at column 206, on this subject were incorrect. The position is that at 24 March there were 45, not 48 licences for the farming of mink in force in England. These licences covered 46, not 49 farms. A year earlier there were 42 licences covering 43 farms, not 44.

Agricultural Debt

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of agricultural debt per acre in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: In 1985, the latest year for which firm figures are available, the average level of agricultural debt in the United Kingdom was £179·62 per acre, the provisional figure for 1986 is £182·87 per acre and the forecast figure for 1987 is £188·28 per acre.

Quick-frozen Foods

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the negotiations over European Community document 9402/84 on the approximation of laws relating to quick-frozen foodstuffs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 20 April 1988 at columns 505-6.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next proposes to meet representatives of the Country Landowners Association to discuss the woodland grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet the Country Landowners Association for the specific purpose of discussing this subject.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding good stewardship of ancient monuments by the agricultural community.

Mr. Gummer: My officials regularly meet English Heritage and other archaelogical interests. During these meetings, and in their response to relevant consultation papers issued by my Department, these interests have made known their views on good stewardship of ancient monuments by the agricultural community.

Free Food Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of Thursday 21 April, how much of the butter and beef available under the free food scheme in the United Kingdom has already been released; how much he expects to be released; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Butter and beef is now being allocated to designated organisations for withdrawal from intervention during the rest of 1988, up to the full limit of £10·4 million on the funds that the Commission has authorised for the United Kingdom. My present expectation is that this will be sufficient to fund the release of about 2,500 tonnes of butter and about 1,600 tonnes of beef. Release will start when the designated organisations have made their practical arrangements.

Donnington Fire (Pollution)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of farmland has suffered from pollution following the fire at Donnington, Shropshire; what monitoring his Department is undertaking; and what criteria he will use in deciding whether to take emergency powers to protect human health under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An area of farmland of about 162 hectares immediately downwind of the fire, covering two farms, has been affected by deposited ash and particles. The Ministry immediately undertook an extensive survey of vegetation in the area covered by the smoke plume extending across Shropshire to the Welsh border; no asbestos was found in these samples. A more intensive survey in the immediate vicinity of the fire has found some evidence of local deposition of asbestos in the debris; further analysis of food crops grown in the vicinity of the fire is in progress.

The criteria for action under part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 are listed in section 1(1) of the Act. Advice has been given to farmers in the affected area to keep livestock under cover and I understand the local environmental health officer has advised householders to wash fruit and vegetables from their garden.

Research and Development

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of bodies in Scotland, England and Wales whose research and development funding is currently under review by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. MacGregor: The current internal review of Agriculture Departments' R and D expenditure covers all areas of activity with particular reference to near market work. I cannot comment on the implications for particular locations at this stage.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of research institutes in the United Kingdom currently in receipt of financial support for research and development from public funds.

Mr. MacGregor: Within the areas of responsibility of my Department, public funds are used to support both in-house research and externally commissioned work at a large number of locations. My Department also provides a grant in aid to the royal botanic gardens, and has ad hoc contracts with certain universities and a limited number of commercial establishments. The main external contractors are the Agricultural and Food Research Council and Natural Environment Research Council, details of whose institutes are available from the councils themselves.

Work on agriculture, fisheries and food is also funded by the Department of Education and Science, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Barnes Review

Dr. Bray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the terms of reference of the Barnes review of the transfer of technology and the effectiveness of near market research and development which his Department supports.

Mr. MacGregor: I am placing a copy of the terms of reference in the Library of the House, though as the review is an internal policy study we do not intend to publish its findings.

Fallow Land (Grants)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning land which is left fallow and for which grants are obtained which is subsequently used for stock grazing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Under the Community set-aside scheme, member states have the option of permitting extensive grazing of livestock on land taken out of production. We have received a number of representations both for and against operating this option in the United Kingdom, and we shall be taking these into account in deciding on the final form of the national scheme. An announcement on this will be made as soon as possible.

Clyde Herring

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his intention to seek a review of the state of the stock of Clyde herring before the end of May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The annual and international process of obtaining and analysing scientific data on fish stocks is initially undertaken by a variety of scientific working groups, which then submit reports to the advisory committee for fisheries management (ACFM) for consideration. The ACFM will then produce a further report reviewing the state of the stocks (including the Clyde herring stock) and providing advice on management policy. The ACFM will be meeting from 16 to 26 May 1988 and will report shortly thereafter. I shall take a particular interest in their advice on all stocks of importance to United Kingdom fishermen, including, of course, Clyde herring.

Forestry Grant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 398, he will state (a) the area of land approved for forestry grant-aid and (b) the area of land planted or restocked by the private sector, in each of the five English conservancies of the Forestry Commission in the three years 31 March 1985, and in each of the three conservancies in the years from 1 April 1985 to date.

Mr. Gummer: [holding answer 22 April 1988]:

The information is as follows:

Year Ended 31 March	Conservancy	Area of new planting or restocking approved for grant-aid (hectares)	Area of new planting or restocking grant-aided by the Forestry Commission (hectares
1983	North West	1,142	495

TRANSPORT

Disabled People (Facilities)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the level of grants local authorities give under section 106 of the Transport Act 1985 towards providing, maintaining or improving (a) any vehicle equipment or other facilities intended wholly or mainly for disabled people, or (b) any equipment or other facilities intended to provide assistance for disabled people which are incorporated in vehicles, and so on, designed for the public at large.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for local authorities to decide what use to make of the powers conferred on them by section 106 of the Transport Act 1985 to make grants towards the provision or adaptation of vehicles to meet the needs of disabled people. The Department does not keep central records of expenditure incurred.

Public Utilities (Replacement Work)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what survey by his Department has taken place as to the replacement work undertaken by public utilities on repairs of holes they dig on public highways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department commissioned a comprehensive review of public utilities street works from a committee chaired by Professor Michael Horne, whose report was published in November 1985. It found that the principal problem with reinstatements was the division of responsibility between the utility and the highway authority, leading to poor temporary reinstatements.

The committee's principal recommendation was that the full responsibility should be placed on the utilities, backed up by a series of recommendations to ensure that they do a good job. The report was generally welcomed and the Government have accepted the great majority of the recommendations.

We are committed to introduce the necessary legislation. We are seeking a suitable opportunity to bring it before Parliament.

A1 (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the recent fatal accident on the A1 at Great Ponton in Lincolnshire, he will reconsider his decision not to instal central reservation crash barriers for the entire length of the A1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been no such decision. We are installing central reserve safety fencing on the A1 in accordance with the revised criteria announced on 17 December 1986.

There is a rolling programme, phased in with major maintenance works in order to minimise disruption to the travelling public.

The scheme to install safety fencing along a length of the A1 at Great Ponton was completed in November 1986. Unfortunately the fatal accident occurred just south of this section.

Cycle Routes (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with London borough councils as to their policy on developing cycle routes within their borough; and what money he has allocated for this work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is a member, together with the London boroughs, of the London cycling forum, an advisory body sponsored by the London planning advisory committee.

Cycling schemes which meet the criteria set out in the Department's circular 1/88 are eligible for transport supplementary grant as part of highway improvements.

I will send the hon. Member leaflets, produced by the Department's traffic advisory unit, describing good practice in cycle schemes in London. This series is available in the Library.

Speed Limits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the speed limits at which traffic may pass through residential areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Applications to the Department for speed limits below 30mph will be considered sympathetically when allied to speed-reducing engineering measures. In residential areas, it is for the local highway authorities to consider individual cases using guidance from the advisory criteria given in circulars Roads 1/80 and 4/83. General policy on speed limits is kept under constant review.

Horne Report

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is intending to take on implementing the recommendations of the Horne report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are preparing proposals for legislation and we are consulting the street works advisory committee on these. When the proposals are complete we intend to consult interested parties. Action is proceeding jointly with the utilities and highway authorities to implement recommendations of the report relating to specifications for reinstatements, the training and certification of workmen, and the development of a computerised street works register. Negotiations are taking place on the arrangements for diversionary works.

Local Authority Transport Expenditure

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what grounds his decision was made to consult outside bodies on his Department's arrangements for local authority transport expenditure; on what basis outside bodies are intended to respond to his Department's request for information; what information has been provided by his Department to outside bodies for consideration of these matters and his Department's developing position; and if he is contemplating changes in expenditure arrangements, specifically in relation to transport supplementary grants.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As part of the continuing programme to review efficiency of Government Departments, the Department of Transport is carrying out an efficiency scrutiny of its activities in relation to local authorities' capital expenditure on roads. As is usual for such scrutinies, the examining officer is seeking the views of outside bodies that may have an interest in the activities under review. Information on the present arrangements is already generally available. We have no immediate plans to change the arrangements for transport supplementary grant. We shall consider suggestions for change including any which arise from the present review.

Street Works Advisory Committee (Recommendations)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors are delaying the introduction of legislation to implement the recommendations of the street works advisory committee in relation to excavation of roads by public utilities; what representations he has received from the relevant statutory undertakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The street works advisory committee is advising the Department on our proposals for legislation to implement the Horne report. The proposals are not yet complete because we are awaiting the outcome of negotiations between the public utilities and highway authorities on the issue of diversions to utility apparatus required as a consequence of highway improvement works.

The Government are committed to legislation and we are seeking a suitable opportunity to introduce it, but we have a full programme of legislation.

The statutory undertakers in their collective response to the Horne report supported the need for legislation. Letters from the chairmen of British Gas and the Electricity Council support its early introduction.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest accumulated debt on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated accumulated debt at the end of the 1987-88 financial year was £95 million.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available figures for traffic flows across the Severn bridge (a) on a daily basis and (b) in total.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average daily traffic flow across the Severn bridge for the year up to the end of March 1988 was 44,263 vehicles. Since the opening of the crossing in 1966, nearly 230 million vehicles have used it.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the overall operating deficit on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated overall deficit, including interest and sinking fund contributions, was £11·5 million in 1987-88.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to increase tolls on the Severn bridge following the recent report from the Auditor General.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It was said in the foreword to the 1986-87 account, published on 6 April, that the question of a tolls increase is under review.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to write off the accumulated debt on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 8 December 1987, Official Report, columns 119-20.

Brigg and Redbourne (Bypass)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why there is a further delay to the tendering process of the A15 Brigg and Redbourne bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the preparatory work is not proceeding as quickly as Humberside county council, the highway authority responsible for the scheme, would wish. The contract preparation has been delayed because the Department's new specification for highway works has been applied to this project. The new road will benefit from the higher standard of construction.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction to begin on the A15 Brigg and Redbourne bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a Humberside county council scheme for which the Department is giving a 100 per cent. grant to approved expenditure. The starting date is for the council to determine, within the constraints of the Department's grant rules.

Yorkshire and Humberside (Regional Director)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his regional director for Yorkshire and Humberside will be replying to the letter dated 25 April from the director of technical services of Humberside county council; and if a copy of this reply will be sent to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: He will do so shortly. A copy will be sent to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why there is a delay in the issuing of grant approval for the A15 Brigg and Redbourne bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Grant approval should be issued shortly after the necessary financial approvals have been obtained. We need to be sure that, in the light of the recently notified substantial increase in the estimated cost, the scheme represents value for money.

National Travel Survey

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the results of the last national travel survey; and whether a decision has been taken on the timing of the next survey.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A report of the 1985-86 national travel survey has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. We have asked the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to begin data collection for the next national travel survey in June. We have decided that it would be more cost-effective if the survey were a continuous one. The new survey, which will follow the same design as that held in 1985-86, will collect data from 10,000 households over three years instead of 12 months.

Merchant Navy (Training)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what use he proposes to make of the powers in the Merchant Shipping Bill [Lords] to give financial assistance in respect of Merchant Navy training.

Mr. Channon: I am placing in the Library a document entitled "A Scheme for Department of Transport Assistance for Merchant Navy Officer Training", which outlines the training scheme I propose to introduce under powers contained in the Merchant Shipping Bill.

In developing this scheme I have had two objectives. The first is to increase the number of officers being trained for service in the Merchant Navy, which declined significantly during the 1980s. The second is to build on and develop the existing training arrangements, and on the use already being made by the industry of Government financial assistance, notably the funding available under the Manpower Services Commission's youth training scheme.

The scheme will arrange for suitable men and women, whether specially recruited officer cadets or in-service rating trainees, to follow a programme of training which leads to a Department of Transport first certificate of competency as a deck officer or marine engineer officer, in accordance with the recommendations of the Merchant Navy training board and as approved by my Department.

Each officer trainee in respect of whom Department of Transport assistance is payable will be required to be employed or sponsored by a managing agent who will be responsible for the administration of the trainee's full programme of vocational education and training from recruitment to completion. The managing agent might be a traditional shipping company, a suitable training company or group, or a nautical college. The overall scheme will be managed on my Department's behalf by a co-ordinating agent. I am pleased that the General Council of British Shipping, which has a wealth of experience and contacts in this field, has agreed to take on the role of co-ordinating agent for the scheme. Recruitment to the scheme will be through the managing agents, under the guidance of the co-ordinating agent.

At present, where officer trainees are following a scheme of training approved by the Manpower Services Commission, and are eligible on age grounds, the managing agent receives assistance in respect of such trainees at the standard rates (currently £37 per week) for the YTS scheme. Those arrangements will continue, and managing agents will be expected to take the maximum advantage of assistance available both under the YTS and from LEA grants. My Department will give financial assistance in respect of trainees who are ineligible for YTS assistance on age grounds. This assistance will be given at the rate of £50 per trainee per week. Thus an officer trainee who began a four-year course of training at age 16 would, if following an approved course, be eligible for assistance for the first two years under YTS, and for the second two years under my Department's scheme. For a trainee embarking on a course at age 18, or later, assistance would be claimed under my Department's scheme for the entire period. In either case, assistance under my Department's scheme would be abated by the amount of any LEA grant payable.

I plan to give assistance under my Department's scheme not only in respect of new trainees, but in respect of trainees who are already undergoing an approved course of training and who are ineligible for YTS grants on age grounds. I shall be announcing in due course the date from which payments will be made in respect both of new and of existing trainees. My aim is, with the help of the co-ordinating agent and of the managing agents, to have the scheme in operation to give financial assistance in respect of the new intake of officer trainees this autumn.

I also recognise the importance of junior officers studying for higher statutory qualifications. I therefore plan to make payments, again at the rate of £50 per head per week, towards the costs of officers studying for such qualifications, for the number of weeks of study leave which are prescribed by current National Maritime Board agreements. These payments would be made either to the individuals concerned, or to companies employing them who provide paid study leave, as appropriate. These payments will also be administered by the co-ordinating agent.

I believe that these arrangements will be widely welcomed in the industry. As has already been announced, a budget of £2·5 million has been earmarked for the scheme in 1988-89, and £3·5 million for the full year 1989-90. This will represent a very significant level of financial assistance, over and above that available through YTS, for training in the industry. Our intention is that the Government's support should lead to a substantial increase in the number of cadets being trained and should open up new opportunities in the industry for those interested in a challenging and worthwhile career. I hope that everyone concerned will take full advantage of this assistance.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when negotiations will be resumed with the United States Government on the licence application of United States carriers for new services to and from Manchester airport; what action has been taken since the previous negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United States Government are not prepared to enter into further substantial discussions on United States carriers' access to Manchester until next year. Her Majesty's Government have pursued a number of points arising from the March talks. We will try to secure a resumption of negotiations as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

"The Urban Renaissance"

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts, further to his reply of 28 March, Official Report, column 353, what information he has on (a) the larger research project of which "The Urban Renaissance" is a part, (b) the firm of consultants undertaking the research project, and (c) the total cost of the larger research project.

Mr. Luce: The consultants, Dewe Rogerson Ltd., are assisting the Arts Council in a widespread public information campaign designed to encourage partnerships among inner city agencies, arts organisations, local government and the private sector to promote the use of the arts in the regeneration of urban areas. "The Urban Renaissance" is a part of that campaign. Fees paid to individual consultants are not separately identified in the Arts Council's accounts.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts, further to his reply of 28 March, Official Report, column 353, what information he has on how the time of the Arts Council's permanent staff was costed and attributed to production of the Arts Council pamphlet "The Urban Renaissance".

Mr. Luce: An estimate was made of the staff time taken on the preparation of the material, and the cost of that time was estimated by reference to the salaries and overhead costs of the staff engaged.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the printing costs of the Arts Council pamphlet "The Urban Renaissance".

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The pamphlet cost £2,560 to print.

Challenge Training Scheme

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the cost of the Arts Council pamphlet on the challenge training scheme.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The Arts Council pamphlet on incentive funding, "Better Business for the Arts" cost £7,932. There is no scheme or pamphlet on "challenge training".

Visits and Entertainment (Costs)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the cost of (a) ministerial visits and (b) entertaining in his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Ministerial visits £	Ministerial entertaining £
1984-85	9,514	5,219
1985-86	23,272	8,344
1986-87	18,030	3,931
1987-88	10,664	5,749

The figures include the related costs of staff in direct support of the Minister.

The Office of Arts and Libraries was established as an independent Department in July 1983 and corresponding figures for 1983-84 are not available.

Arts Council (Annual Report)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he expects the Arts Council to publish its annual report for 1987-88.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: In the autumn of 1988.

Arts Council

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on moneys in his grant to the Arts Council for 1988-89 which remain unallocated.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The sum of £140,795 is still to be allocated by the council.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Don Valley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many constituents in Don Valley will (a) benefit and (b) lose, when the Social Security Act 1986 comes into effect in April 1988 in the following categories (a) single pensioners under the age of 80 years, (b) single pensioners over the age of 80 years, (c) pensioner couples under the age of 80 years, (d) pensioner couples over the age of 80 years, (e) single unemployed under the age of 25 years, (f) single unemployed over the age of 25 years, (g) unemployed couples, (h) unemployed couples with children and (i) single parent families.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 12 April 1988, at column 122.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average delay in publishing the monthly mortality figures.

Mrs. Currie: There has been no delay over the last year. Estimated numbers of deaths registered in four-weekly periods for England and Wales, and counties at age under one week, under one year and at all ages are published about seven weeks after the end of the period to which they relate. Similar weekly statistics for England and Wales only are published 11 days after the end of the period to which they relate (excepting public holidays). Both sets of figures are published currently in "OPCS Monitor" series WR "Registrar General's Weekly Return for England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

Abortions

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much National Health Service time each week is spent by (a) consultants and (b) nurses in carrying out abortions, and caring for the patients involved.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967 in the Pontefract health authority area for each of the last seven years for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed on ground four where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped; and how many of these abortions were performed on ground five to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

AIDS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much he intends to spend over the next three years on curbing the spread of infection of AIDS; and how much he expects to spend thereafter on the care of people with this disease.

Mr. Newton: We attach the highest priority to measures to stop the spread of HIV infection. This is the purpose of the public education campaign; the public health measures which have been taken; and why all health authorities have been asked to draw up plans for local action on AIDS and HIV. In 1988-89 the Government have allocated £10 million for further development of AIDS public education, including maintaining the national AIDS helpline. We have earmarked £58·6 million in 1988-89 to help develop preventive, counselling and diagnostic services and to make a contribution towards the cost of care and treatment in hospitals and the community.

In addition we expect to continue to provide support for voluntary agencies such as the Terrence Higgins Trust which carry out educational and counselling activities aimed at preventing the further spread of HIV infection.

Firm spending plans beyond 1988-89 will be decided following the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

Premature Babies (Deaths)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities in England and Wales, and where situated, have facilities of a special room set aside to help parents come to terms with the death of their premature baby, similar to room 5 of the special care baby unit at the Rosie maternity hospital, Cambridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally. The third report of the maternity services advisory committee titled "Care of the Mother and Baby" did however advise health authorities to provide such a private room for the parents of a baby likely to die soon after birth.

I am aware of the efforts being made in Cambridge to help parents come to terms with the grief of bereavement; such sensitive and kindly care is deeply appreciated by all concerned.

Orthotics Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's report on its study of the arrangement for the delivery of the orthotics service, its efficiency and efficacy is to be published.

Mrs. Currie: The departmental team which conducted this study has not yet finalised its report. Decisions on publication will be taken when the final report has been completed.

Income Support

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people were receiving income support (a) nationally and (b) through each of his Department's local offices in Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool on Monday 11 April;

(2) how many people receiving income support on 11 April (a) nationally and (b) through each of his Department's local offices in Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool were also in receipt of transitional protection.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many retirement pensioners are in receipt of income support within the Wakefield metropolitan district; and how many of them are receiving a transitional addition.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. Information on the number of claimants receiving income support will be available from the end of May.

Single Payment

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for his Department's offices at Cumbernauld (a) the number of single payment applications and (b) the number granted in each week for the first three months of the current year.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has only one office in Cumbernauld. Information in the form requested is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Figures are however collected for the numbers of decisions made on single payment claims which represent full or partial awards of supplementary benefit in respect of the items claimed, and the numbers of decisions to refuse payment. These are given in the table for the first three complete four-weekly statistical periods in 1988. The figures are provisional and subject to revision.

	Full awards	Partial awards	Refusals	Value £
13 January to 9 February	644	35	299	42,864
10 February to 7 March	1,127	30	576	79,627
8 March to 8 April[1]	919	27	315	69,150

[1] Statistical period lengthened to align with the end of the supplementary benefit scheme.

Departmental Television Advertising

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many advertisements from his Department have been rejected by the Independent Broadcasting Authority for broadcast in the current year.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Waltham Forest (Ward Closures)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all temporary ward closures in Waltham Forest district by date of first closure; and if, in each case, he will indicate when the ward is expected to re-open, or when consultations on permanent closure are expected to commence.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Waltham Forest health authority.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if payments from the Independent Living Fund will be disregarded when disabled people are being assessed for means-tested benefits.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby South, (Mrs. Beckett) on 12 April at columns 102-3.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many applications to the Independent Living Fund have been received; and what arrangements there are to make grants to those people who fulfil the eligibility criteria;

(2) how the assessment of applicants to the Independent Living Fund is to be undertaken, and by whom.

Mr. Scott: The arrangements for assessing and making payments from the Independent Living Fund will be a matter for the trustees to decide when the fund is formally established. By the end of last week we had received eight completed application forms. A further 30 application forms had been sent out as a result of inquiries to the fund about specific individuals.

As an interim measure, officials, guided by professional advice, are making inquiries and carrying out assessments so that when the trust is formally established decisions can be taken swiftly. We shall look sympathetically at individual cases and, where appropriate, officials will arrange for payments in advance of the fund itself coming into operation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what stage negotiations to register the Independent Living Fund as a charity have reached.

Mr. Scott: Counsel is making the final adjustments to the draft trust deed which we shall then put to the charity commissioners for urgent consideration.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline the review procedure for applicants turned down by the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 12 April at column 12.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the trustees of the Independent Living Fund are to be appointed; why they have not yet been appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund's trust deed will provide that there will be up to 10 trustees of whom five may be appointed by the Secretary of State and five by the Disablement Income Group. I will announce the names when the fund is ready to be formally established.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether legislation will be introduced to disregard payments from the Independent Living Fund for the purposes of assessing housing benefit.

Mr. Scott: We plan to do so as soon as possible. The eligibility criteria for the fund, which I announced on 31 March in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) at columns 659-60, contain a provision for the fund to make good any housing benefit reductions arising from payments by the fund, once the planned change to housing benefit legislation has taken effect.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical basis was used by his Department when assessing the potential number of applicants to the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: The February 1986 sample of supplementary benefit cases indicated that there were some 250 people of all ages receiving domestic additions of more than £20 a week. However the sample for this group was very small, thus the figure has been taken only as a broad indication that the number of successful claims is likely to be counted in hundreds rather than thousands.

Electoral Register

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish for each English and Welsh constituency the numerical and percentage change of the number of people on the electoral register between February 1987 and February 1988.

Mrs. Currie: A table giving the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the 1985-based forecast for the expected percentage change of the number of people on the electoral register between mid-1987 and mid-1988 in (a) Wales, and (b) England.

Mrs. Currie: Forecasts of the changes in the number of people on the electoral register from one year to another are not prepared centrally. However the mid-1985-based projections of the resident population aged 17 years and over—which includes some people ineligible for electoral purposes—suggest that the percentage change between mid-1987 and mid-1988 would be approximately 0·5 per cent. for both Wales and England.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he expects the percentage increase to be of the number of people on the electoral register in (a) Wales, and (b) England for each of the next five years.

Mrs. Currie: The mid-1985 based projections of the resident population suggest the following changes over the next five years.

Mid year to mid year period	Percentage increase in resident population aged 17+
(a) Wales
1987-88	0·5
1988-89	0·2
1989-90	0·2
1990-91	0·1
1991-92	0·0
1992-93	0·0
(b) England
1987-88	0·5
1988-89	0·4
1989-90	0·3
1990-91	0·2
1991-92	0·1
1992-93	0·0

Emphysema

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the industrial injury advisory council's report on its investigation into emphysema among coal miners.

Mr. Scott: The council's report on bronchitis and emphysema will be published on 19 May 1988.

Look After Your Heart Campaign

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to increase spending on the Look After Your Heart campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Government funding of the Look After Your Heart campaign was £420,000 in 1986-87 and £1·5 million in 1987-88. We are increasing this further in 1988-89 to £1·8 million to which, in addition, the Health Education Authority will be contributing £2 million. We have a continuing commitment to this vital campaign, which aims, in the longer term, to bring about a significant reduction in the unacceptable level of premature death from coronary heart disease.

Heart Disease (Report)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of the recent recommendations of the national forum for coronary heart disease prevention report, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have read the recommendations of the national forum's report with interest. We are at present developing the second year of the Look After Your Heart campaign and will consider carefully the comprehensive and helpful suggestions the report makes. We have no plans to set up further committees as the report suggests.

Christie Hospital, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any plans for the direct funding of Christie hospital, Manchester; what information he has as to how many patients come from outside the north-west region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There are no current plans to fund Christie hospital, Manchester directly. Information is not held centrally on the number of patients who attend the hospital from outside North Western region. The right hon. Member may wish to raise that matter with the chairman of North Western regional health authority.

Surplus Land (North-West)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much surplus land and property has been sold by the North Western regional health authority; what sums were raised as a result; and how much further land and property held by the authority is surplus to requirement.

Mrs. Currie: All health authorities are encouraged to dispose of redundant land and buildings promptly. Information is not held centrally on the number of surplus land and property sites sold by North Western regional health authority, but revenue from sales over the last five-year period is given as:

1982-83	599,762
1983-84	998,663
1984-85	1,978,761
1985-86	2,693,555
1986-87	8,768,675

There are approximately 10 land-property sites over 1 acre currently considered surplus to requirement. This figure may vary, however, depending on local service rationalisation decisions.

London (Staffing Shortages)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take following the survey undertaken by his Department's inspectorate on behalf of the Greater London branch of the Director of Social Services, entitled "London Workforce Survey —November 1987", concerned with staffing shortages in social services in the capital.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 26 April 1988 at column 127.

Income Support (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in the week beginning 11 April in those of his Department's offices serving London or London postal districts (a) how many claimants had their conversion from supplementary benefit to income support completed, (b) how many claimants granted income support received a transitional addition and (c) what was the average amount of any transitional addition they received.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Departmental Offices (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of his Department's offices servicing London, or London postal districts, have been closed since 1 March as a result of (a) industrial action, (b) staff shortages and (c) other reasons.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of DHSS offices closed to the public for varying periods, in the London postal districts, and Greater London area since 1 March 1988 are:

(a) 34;
(b) Nil;
(c) 10.

Pathology Laboratories (Staffing)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the report, commissioned by the manpower planning advisory group, on staffing of pathology laboratories was received by the National Health Service management board; how and when he intends to publish its findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report was considered by the manpower planning advisory group in February and referred by it to the National Health Service Management Board and regional chairmen. We intend to circulate the report to health authorities and others shortly.

War Disabled

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many war disabled have lost money through the recent housing benefit changes.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available. However, the hon. Member will know that even after the recent changes, it is a matter for local authority discretion whether war pensions and war widows' pensions shall be disregarded in assessing income when calculating housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce new proposals to exclude the war disabled from financial loss through housing benefit changes.

Mr. Portillo: War disabled claimants who have had their housing benefit reduced as a direct result of the housing benefit reforms, which took effect at the beginning of April this year, will receive transitional protection in the same way as other qualifying groups. Further details of the proposals announced on 27 April will be made available shortly.

Benefit Changes (Correspondence)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received regarding the changes in social security.

Mr. Portillo: Many, as indeed I have on most other issues concerning social security.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a break-down of the groups comprising the 10 per cent. of claimants said not to gain in cash terms as a result of the social security reforms.

Mr. Scott: Detailed estimates classified by family status and by client group may be found in tables 7A and 8A of "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" published in October 1987. Copies are available in the Library.

Housing Benefit Regulations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his statement in the House on 27 April, what estimate he has made of the administrative costs to local authorities of implementing the further proposed changes in housing benefit regulations; and if he will take steps to compensate local authorities for these additional costs.

Mr. Portillo: We intend to adjust the provision for local authorities' housing benefit administration costs to reflect the additional work arising from the changes announced on 27 April. We shall be discussing the work involved and the likely costs with the local authority associations.

Accident and Emergency Units (Closure)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 751, he will make it his policy not to refer hon. Members to chairmen of district health authorities when answering questions on the closure of accident and emergency units.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of health services in England is the responsibility of 190 district health authorities and 90 family practitioner committees which are best placed to determine local priorities and needs. In questions regarding detail of individual hospital services, referral to the district health authority chairman is usually the most appropriate and efficient way to answer the questions of hon. Members.

Social Security Agreements (Reciprocal Arrangements)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the countries (a) with which there are reciprocal social security agreements; (b) in which British emigrant pensioners receive regular uprating of pensions in line with the United Kingdom; and if he is considering arranging an agreement to include Canada in the latter category.

Mr. Scott: The United Kingdom has reciprocal social security agreements with the following countries. British emigrant pensioners receive regular uprating of pensions in line with those in the United Kingdom in all these countries except for those marked with an asterisk.

Australia*
Austria
Belgium
Bermuda
Canada*
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
France
Federal Republic of Germany
Gibraltar
Greece
Iceland
Republic of Ireland
Isle of Man
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Jersey and Guernsey
Luxembourg
Malta
Mauritius
Netherlands
New Zealand*
Norway*
Portugal
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
United States of America
Yugoslavia

United Kingdom pension upratings are also paid to pensioners living in Sark by virtue of a provision of the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1973.

Canadian and United Kingdom officials have discussed the possibility of revising the agreement between the two countries so that pension increases would be payable. However, to pay full United Kingdom pensions to all British pensioners in Canada would cost an additional £41 million a year. In view of the substantial costs involved I cannot say when we shall be able to make further progress towards a revised agreement.

Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of trained midwives in (a) England, (b) Leeds Eastern health authority and (c) Leeds Western health authority for each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Newton: The figures requested are shown in the table. Figures for 30 September 1986 are the latest available to this level of detail.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if any decisions have yet been made on the disbursement of money to charities following the error in the retail price index.

Mr. Scott: The balance remaining out of the saving attributable to the RPI error in the social security uprating is £7·5 million after allowing for the compensatory payments to individual beneficiaries. This sum will be paid to charities whose activities broadly benefit those groups affected by the error. The sum available to charities in England is £6·4 million. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Wales will be making separate announcements about their own arrangements.

I have received many offers of help with the disbursement of these funds and requests for a share of the available money. After careful consideration and consultation with representatives of voluntary organisations I have decided to allocate just over £4 million direct to individual voluntary organisations for specific purposes. These organisations are listed at table A together with the amounts it is proposed they should receive.

In addition we will be discussing with three generalist organisations arrangements for the disbursement of a further £2 million of funding to local voluntary bodies. The three organisations concerned are listed at table B together with the amounts it is proposed they should receive. It is envisaged that these charities will be better placed to fund local organisations working within the particular fields of the groups of claimants who it has not been possible to compensate.

A further public statement will be made shortly about the arrangements for local voluntary organisations who are not listed at table A to apply for funding.

My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General has today made an announcement on the allocation of moneys to public service charities in respect of the RPI error.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a regional breakdown of the number of claimants whose housing benefit will not be restored as a result of the transitional arrangements announced on 27 April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how it is intended to inform claimants that they will now have some of their housing benefit restored; and whether his Department's local offices will write direct to claimants; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how long the transitional period will last in respect of those who will have some of their housing benefit restored; and whether any distinction will be made after the transitional period between claimants who will then lose housing benefit at different rates;

(3) from what date housing benefit will be restored to claimants during the transitional period; and how soon individuals will be informed directly of the position.

Mr. Portillo: We will be making a further announcement shortly.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants who have savings in excess of £3,000 have lost some of their housing benefit; whether he will now raise the capital sum at which benefit begins to be reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 27 April, the upper limit for capital will be increased for housing benefit to £8,000, but the lower level remains at £3,000.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to make an oral statement to the House before any further changes are made in the transitional arrangements regarding housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No.

National Childbirth Trust

Sir Geoffry Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply of 27 April, Official Report, columns 177-78, he will state, in the light of his Department's continuous funding of the National Childbirth Trust since 1977-78, what particular difficulties have arisen which have led to a delay of seven months since September 1987 in reaching a decision on the trust's application for a further three years' funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We receive many requests for section 64 funding and each application has to be carefully examined. The National Childbirth Trust's is currently being dealt with in conjunction with a number of others. The financial position of the trust has altered since its last award. We hope to announce the decision shortly.

Medical Compensation Scheme

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions have taken place between his officials and the BMA about a pilot scheme for a medical compensation scheme since the Attorney-General's reply to the Adjournment debate on 16 December, Official Report column 1214.

Mrs. Currie: Officials met the BMA at the association's request in January. No firm proposal for a pilot scheme was put forward by the BMA. The representatives of the BMA were advised that some of their concern about cost and slowness in clearing actions through the courts was likely to be met by the civil justice review and that no "no fault compensation" scheme would be considered until the outcome of that review is known.

Medical Equipment and Telephone Systems (Rental)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards district health authorities renting medical equipment or telephone systems or creating a capital fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The National Health Service may employ renting for such items but only where it represents best overall value for money to the Exchequer as a whole. The full costs of renting must be shown to be lower than outright purchase and the Department's and, in most cases, the Treasury's approval is required. Health authorities derive capital funding from the Exchequer (and the sale of surplus property) on an annual basis.

Hospital Waiting List (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the waiting time by speciality and by individual consultant for patients to be seen by consultants in the Nottingham district health authority for their initial examination having been referred by their general practitioner.

Mr. Newton: Information on out-patient waiting times is not collected centrally.

NHS Managers (Performance Awards)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 21 April, how many of the performance awards paid to National Health Service managers in the Yorkshire regional health authority area related to their achievement of hospital or ward closures.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Information about the objectives set for individual district and unit general managers is not held centrally. It is however highly unlikely that any such awards are in the form suggested by the hon. Member, since planned hospital or ward closures will normally be part of wider objectives in improving the use of resources or developing new patterns of service, and performance criteria will be related to the achievement of these wider objectives.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Safety

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Her Majesty's Government propose to implement the undertaking given in December 1980 by the then Secretary of State for the Home Department to issue a national advisory standard on fire safety in houses of multiple occupation.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office plans to publish the final version of the national advisory standard for England and Wales later this year.

Driving Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions for each of the last three years for (i) driving without due care and attention under section 3 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 and (ii) failing to have proper control over a vehicle under regulation 104 of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986; and if he will express the figures as a percentage change for each of the years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information on offences under section 3 of the 1972 Act relates to proceedings and findings of guilt at magistrates courts and is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table 5 of the issues for 1984 to 1986, the latest available), copies of which are in the Library. For offences under regulation 104 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 and corresponding earlier legislation, proceedings were recorded in respect of 733 alleged offences in the magistrates' courts in 1986, 622 of which resulted in a finding of guilt; equivalent figures for 1984 and 1985 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. As from 1 October 1986, offences under regulation 104 may be dealt with by means of a fixed penalty notice, but the information collected centrally does not separately distinguish offences under regulation 104 from other careless driving offences.

Right of Entry

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the categories of officials by Department entitled to statutory right of entry to private property.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I can, however, assure my hon. Friend that the Government are concerned that statutory rights of entry should not be created unnecessarily. A systematic review of powers of entry by public officials was completed in 1981. As a result of the review, Ministers recommended that 30 powers should be revoked and up to 63 modified. Following the review, the Government instituted arrangements which provide for the Department to scrutinise centrally all new proposals to provide new legal powers of entry in order to ensure that they are fully justified and that they do not impose an undue burden on those who will be affected by them.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether police officers who work with personal data used for a purpose associated with national security are instructed to ignore the code of practice which relates to personal data used for police purposes.

Mr. Hurd: The code of practice issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers explains the circumstances in which personal data are exempt from the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why a code of practice for personal data used for national security purposes, similar to the code for personal data used for police purposes, will not be introduced.

Mr. Hurd: For the reason I gave in reply to an earlier question from the hon. Member on 9 March at column 195.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend section 28 of the Data Protection Act to cover data gathered in the course of community charge collection.

Mr. Renton: No.

Part-time Firemen

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the number of part-time firemen (a) in Wales and (b) nationally; what their average remuneration per week is; and what assessment he has made of the effect of recent social security changes on the benefits of part-time firemen.

Mr. John Patten: As at 1 January 1988 there were 1,583 retained firefighters in Wales, and 16,896 nationally, excluding Northern Ireland; no information is available centrally regarding their average remuneration. The effect on the benefits of retained firefighters of the recent changes in social security legislation announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services will vary with the circumstances of individual claimants.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on how he intends to curb the spread of drug misuse in Britain; and what resources and advice will be made available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government continue to develop their comprehensive strategy to attack the supply of and demand for drugs by devoting resources to action on five fronts:

—international efforts to reduce supplies from abroad;
—strengthening enforcement by police and customs;
—maintaining effective deterrents and tight domestic controls;
—developing preventive education and publicity;
—improving treatment and rehabilitation.

This strategy is co-ordinated by the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs, which I chair, and is set out in our publication "Tackling Drug Misuse", which we shall shortly be reissuing.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 21 April, Official Report, column 525, he will indicate the sections of the Firearms Act 1968 to which he had regard in relation to his Department's definition of the term class of firearm.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I was referring to the provisions of the Act generally, according to context.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to whether the Thames Valley police (a) applied for and (b) received written confirmation as to the status of the late Michael Ryan's membership of the Wiltshire shooting centre in connection with his application dated 14 July 1987 for a variation to his firearms certificate;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Thames Valley police standard inquiry letter form sent by the chief constable to firearms club secretaries when he inquires into the membership status of applicants who have completed and submitted to him a firearms form 1 for the grant renewal and variation of firearms certificates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his earlier question on 31 March 1988 at column 691.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to on what dates and by police officers of what ranks acting as crime prevention officers visits were made to the house of the late Michael Ryan between 2 April and 30 April 1987 for the purpose of inquiries regarding the applications he made in relation to his firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his earlier question on 31 March 1988 at column 690. I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that the report of the crime prevention officer dated 27 April 1987 does not specify the dates of the visits made.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to when the chief constable's policy of a requirement for the successful completion of a minimum six-month probationary period before an applicant for a firearm certificate may be considered for the grant of such a certificate was introduced, and as to any changes there may have been in that policy subsequently.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that no such policy has been introduced.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disciplinary action he has taken or intends to take in respect of the inaccuracy of the evidence given at the inquest held in connection with the Hungerford murders by Thomas Alfred Warlow, a forensic scientist attached to the Home Office forensic science laboratory at Huntingdon, on the composition and special qualities of the 7·62x 39 bullets fired by the late Michael Ryan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None; I am not aware of any matters that would justify disciplinary action.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the names of which (a) clubs and (b) ranges the police constable wrote on the Thames Valley police form FIR 25(9/74) following the officer's visit to the house of the late Michael Ryan (i) on 30 November 1986 in response to his interview in connection with the receipt of the firearms form 1 application dated 23 November 1986 for the grant of a firearm certificate and (ii) on 28 March 1987 and 25 July 1987 in response to his interview in connection with the receipt of the firearms form 1 application dated 23 March and 14 July respectively; and, in each case, what additional answers the police constable wrote to the following numbered questions on form (5) have reasons why the applicant wishes to acquire or possess the firearm(s)/ammunition been verified?, and (6) with whom have they been verified? and (8) if for use with approved club, give details of range and current membership.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is not the practice to disclose the contents of reports obtained by the police for operational use.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to which (a) clubs and (b) ranges, the late Michael Ryan gave in completing section 14,

"reasons for requiring each of the firearms and ammunition specified", and section 15,

"where do you intend to use each of the firearms specified", when requesting authority to possess firearms on his firearms form 1 applications dated (a) 23 November 1986, (b) 23 March 1987 and (c) 14 July 1987 for the grant of, or variation to, his firearm certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice to disclose the contents of reports obtained by the police for operational use. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question of 31 March 1988 at column 692.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force to list for which firearm permission was subsequently granted by the chief constable to the late Michael Ryan as a result of his firearms form 1 certificates on his applications for the variation of a firearms certificate on his applications dated (a) 23 March 1987 and (b) 14 July 1987;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what firearms the late Michael Ryan requested authority to possess on his firearms form 1 application for the variation of a firearms certificate from the chief constable on his application dated (a) 23 March and (b) 14 July 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that Michael Ryan requested and was granted authority to hold in respect of (a) a ·22 pistol and a ·32 pistol and (b) a 7·62 rifle and a ·30 calibre carbine.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to what is stated in his force's standing orders and amendments to standing orders for the period (a) 23 November 1986 to July 1987 and (b) July 1987 to the current date, in respect of the minimum probationary period required to establish the bonafides of applicants for the (i) grant, (ii) variation and (iii) renewal of firearms certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is not the practice to disclose the contents of documents used for operational purposes by the police.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to whether Mrs. Vickers of the Police Complaints Authority has submitted requests for files and papers to the chief constable of Thames Valley police in the course of investigations into events (a) leading up to and (b) involving the shootings by the late Michael Ryan on 19 August 1987 and as to what response the chief constable has made to such requests, giving dates on which any such material was received by Mrs. Vickers: and if he will indicate the dates on which Mrs. Vickers has had to make any repeat requests for such material; and whether any such requests for such material have been refused or not yet complied with.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 22 April at column 593. I understand that the Police Complaints Authority is entirely satisfied with the co-operation which it is receiving from the Thames Valley police.

Police-School Liaison

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he has taken on the recommendations of the teachers' association, Police Federation joint working party report on police—school liaison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government welcome co-operation between the teaching profession and the police as reflected in this report. Liaison between police and schools is important, not only for education itself but for the prevention of crime and for maintaining the essential relationship of trust and confidence between the police and the public.

The report covers very similar ground to that covered by a report produced jointly by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers in 1986. The Government circulated this report to all schools and police forces. The Home Office and the Department of Education and Science have work in hand to identify and disseminate examples of good practice in police-schools liaison. The Home Office is financing a research project to evaluate the effectiveness of various methods of police-schools liaison and Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools has begun an examination of good practice in a number of local education authorities.

The arrangements for police-schools liaison need to be developed locally. We understand that since the publication of the 1986 report local working parties have been set up in many areas to develop joint police-schools programmes.

Identity Cards

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what cost-benefit analysis has been made, in relation to the possible introduction of universal identity cards analagous to those in force in other countries, of the likely expenditure set against the implications for the convenience and protection of the public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such analysis has been undertaken. That would, in itself, be an expensive exercise and we have no reason to think the practical benefits to be obtained from the introduction of a universal identity card system would be commensurate with what would undoubtedly be the substantial cost of introducing it. No difficulties emerged when national identity cards were withdrawn in 1952, and the police have not asked for their reintroduction.

Passports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of (a) passports lost, (b) passport applications lost and (c) birth certificates lost (i) in the London passport office and (ii) in all the passport offices.

Mr. Renton: The table shows the number of passports lost in transit to the applicant, and not recovered, in each financial year since 1984, when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom. Instances of passports, applications and other documents going astray within a passport office are not separately recorded, but they are conparatively rare. Lost passports and documents submitted in support of passport applications are replaced free of charge to the applicant.

Glasgow	32	30	29	17
Belfast	3	8	10	13
Total	667	569	574	442

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of letters received by Home Secretaries from hon. Members concerning cases of poor service from passport offices.

Mr. Renton: The number of letters on passport matters received from hon. Members since 1 April 1984, when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom, is as follows:

Year	Letters
1984 (April-December)	186
1985	184
1986	238
1987	433

An analysis of the letters by subject matter is not readily available, but the increases during the last two years are largely attributable to letters expressing concern about the standard of service. The large increase in 1987 is primarily attributable to the increased delays following industrial action over pay in the early summer.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each year since 1979 the average period between receipt of a passport application and provision of a passport by (a) the London passport office and (b) all passport offices.

Mr. Renton: The table shows the maximum and minimum delays in processing correctly completed non-urgent passport applications occurring in each financial year since 1984, when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each year since 1979 the total number of passport applications (a) to the London passport office and (b) to all passport offices.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The table shows the number of new passports issued and amendments made to existing passports in each financial year since 1984, when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist at ports to forestall the use of passports lost by passport offices.

Mr. Renton: Security features are incorporated in United Kingdom passports to ensure that any attempts to facilitate their use by another person, through alteration of personal details or substitution of photographs, will be readily apparent on examination of the document at United Kingdom ports of entry.

Passport Offices (Staff)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each year since 1979 the total number of staff employed at (a) the London passport office and (b) all passport offices.

Mr. Renton: The table shows the authorised complement of permanent staff and the peak monthly total of casual staff employed in each financial year since 1984, when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom.

Permanent staff numbers [authorised complement] (+ maximum number of casuals)

	1984-85		1985-86		1986-87		1987-88

Police Informers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what Home Office guidelines exist for police authorities or regional crime squads for rewarding informants (a) who are suspected of having committed a related criminal offence and (b) who are not so suspected;

(2) what percentage of all public funds spent on rewarding informants with knowledge of drug-smuggling operations is provided out of (a) national and (b) local funds;

(3) to what extent police forces provide protection and livelihood for police informants after they have finished co-operating with the police; and whether such protection and livelihood is arranged outside Britain;

(4) what sum is set aside each year by (a) his Department and (b) police authorities by authority for the rewarding of informants with knowledge of drug-smuggling operations;

(5) what amount of public funds was spent on rewarding drug informants for information in each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no central fund for the payment of informants and information about payments to informants in relation to drug smuggling offences is not available. The handling, protection and payment of informants are operational matters for the chief officer of the force concerned. General guidance about the use of informants by the police is included in the consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters (paragraph 1.92), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many successful seizures of drugs have taken place following information supplied to police by informants during each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many drug-related arrests have been made following information supplied to authorities by informants in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that photocopies of passports and other documents sent to his Department by those applying to register as British citizens are made and retained by the Home Office in order to avoid further delays in processing applications.

Mr. Renton: No. Passports and documents submitted with the applications for registration received before 31

December 1987, which were the subject of my statement on 16 February, at column 863, have already been returned.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether passports and other documents, sent to his Department by those applying to register as British citizens, are being returned to the home addresses of applicants by recorded delivery in all cases; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why 19 passports and other documentation relating to various applications to the Home Office were sent from Lunar house, Croydon, in an OHMS envelope, which was badly torn, and not posted by recorded delivery, on 18 April, to the offices of the Bradford Council for Voluntary Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The normal practice is to return passports and documents by recorded delivery post. The cases in question cannot be identified from particulars given, but if the hon. Member will provide further details, I will investigate the matter.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation or take other steps to tackle mortgage fraud.

Mr. John Patten: No. There is no reason to suppose that police powers and the existing criminal law are inadequate for this purpose.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any information on increases in mortgage fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that the fraud squad of the Metropolitan police has set up a special team to deal with this matter.

Nationality

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) adult registration, (b) registration of minors and (c) naturalisation were (i) received and (ii) granted by the nationality division of his Department for each month from April 1987.

Mr. Renton: The following is the information available for applications for British citizenship made under the British Nationality Act 1981 received in case-working groups in the nationality division and granted for each month from April 1987 to March 1988.

British Nationality Act 1981: Applications received

Date	Adult registrations	Minor registrations	Naturalisations

February	4,370	485	1,115
March	3,749	444	1,077

Note: All figures are provisional.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what income the nationality division of his Department received in nationality fees in each month since April 1987.

Mr. Renton: For the required information in respect of 1987, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 11 January 1988 at column 11.

Fees received, net of refunds to unsuccessful applicants during January to March 1988, were as follows:

1988	£
January	1,335,057
February	1,523,734
March	[1]3,282,369

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the budgeted cost and (b) the actual cost of processing nationality applications in the nationality division of his Department during 1987-88.

Mr. Renton: The processing of citizenship applications is required to be self-financing. The budgeted costs per case therefore equate to the fees charged. The outturn costs for 1987-88 are not yet available but will be published in due course.

Concessionary Television Licences (Glanford)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will receive a delegation from the Glanford borough council, led by the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes, to discuss Glanford borough council's application for concessionary television licences.

Mr. Renton: I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what period of time he expects to take to reach a decision on Glanford borough council's application for concessionary television licences for pensioners living in council accommodation.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend hopes to do so within the next few weeks.

Police National Computer

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the operational requirement for the replacement police national computer has yet been issued to potential suppliers; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Hurd: The operational requirement for the replacement police national computer has now been issued to all interested suppliers, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Coaches

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many coach drivers have been prosecuted for dangerous driving following the discharge of their passengers into the middle of the road on Westminster bridge and as to what steps he intends to ensure adequate parking restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hogg: I am advised by the commissioner that there is no record of prosecutions having been brought in such circumstances. The Metropolitan police would take suitable enforcement action if offences came to light. The imposition of parking restrictions is a matter for the local authority concerned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Rating Reform

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the petitions which have been presented in the House for and against the introduction of the poll tax in Scotland since June 1987.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows. All the petitions were presented against the introduction of the community charge in Scotland.

Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish Affairs

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much debating time was allocated to Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish affairs in 1986-87; and what legislation relating exclusively to each region was brought forward.

Mr. Wakeham: Excluding questions, the time allowed in session 1986-87 for debate of Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish affairs was as follows:

	Time
Scottish	28 hours
Welsh	9 hours 48 minutes
Northern Ireland	26 hours 8 minutes

During that period seven Bills were introduced relating solely to Scotland; one Bill related exclusively to Northern Ireland; and none related exclusively to Wales. With regard to secondary legislation, the Secretary of State for Wales presented 12 statutory instruments, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland one statutory instrument, and the Secretary of State for Scotland 111 statutory instruments. In addition, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland brought forward 15 Orders in Council for consideration by the House.

Written Answers to Questions

WALES

Lambs (Mutation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research is being undertaken into the mutation of lambs born in the restricted area in north Wales since the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Scientific and veterinary advice indicates that the level of Chernobyl contamination presents no health hazard to sheep and will have no effect on their fertility and breeding potential.

Congenital defects in lambs may be caused by a variety of factors including viral infections and nutritional deficiencies. There is no evidence that lambs born in the north Wales restricted area have a higher incidence of congenital defects than lambs born elsewhere.

I understand that a research project by Liverpool university into the effects of low levels of radiation on sheep is utilising sheep supplied by farmers in north Wales.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Javelin Missiles

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether Short Brothers has made any applications or inquiries regarding an export licence from the sale of Javelin anti-aircraft missiles to the Government of Chile.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not the practice to comment on individual defence equipment export matters.

Central Heating Oil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer the price differential for bulk storage kerosene based central heating oil charged by different classes of supplies to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No. The price of standard grade kerosene for use in central heating systems is set by the costs of supply and the level of competition in the market. If the hon. Gentleman has any concern about lack of competition in this market, he should put it to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures his Department is taking to seek to increase the gross domestic product per head in the regions of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department offers a range of incentives under its recently launched enterprise initiative, which are designed to encourage self-generating growth in all regions of the country.

Director General of Telecommunications (Report)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has yet received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1987, as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. The fourth report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1987. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

Defence Equipment Manufacturers (Retired Officers)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the rules which affect the employment by defence equipment manufacturers of Royal Naval officers of flag rank, and their equivalents in the Royal Marines, the British Army and the Royal Air Force, following their retirement from Her Majesty's forces; and what specific rules affect senior officers who been engaged in procurement policy.

The Prime Minister: All service officers are required to seek approval prior to accepting an appointment with a defence related business. Particularly senior officers are required to do so before accepting any appointment. The requirement extends for a period of two years after each retirement or resignation. Each application is examined in the light of the circumstances of the proposed appointments including the extent of his involvement in procurement policy. Approval may be withheld for a period of up to two years or some other restriction imposed, including limitations on the areas of work where the individual may be employed.

European Community (Beef)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the current practice of offering beef for sale abroad by subsidy at prices low enough to enable it to be sent back to the United Kingdom at prices lower than are available to home producers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Community agreed a reform to the beef support policy in December 1986 which cut the common support level by some 15 per cent. The Commission's proposals for agricultural prices for 1988-89 envisage a further cut and the beef regime is to be further revised this year in the light of the recent decisions of the European Council. As these steps and the measures which have been applied in the milk sector come into full effect the need to make costly disposals of surplus beef on world markets will decline. Meanwhile, the EC Commission has recognised the need to ensure that additional supplies of beef are available to the Community meat processing industry on terms that enable the Community production to be competitive with processed products from other sources.

ENERGY

Electricity Board Chairmen

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the electricity board area chairmen; and what subjects he hopes to discuss.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the area board chairmen from time to time to discuss a number of issues of common interest.

British Coal

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Sizewell B

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the Advisory Council on Science and Technology's report on the industrial impact of Sizewell B.

Mr. Parkinson: I have placed in the Library of the House today a copy of a letter I have written to Sir Francis Tombs, the chairman of the advisory council, responding to points raised in the council's report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Postal Centres International Ltd.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Attorney-General if the Crown Prosecution Service has yet reached a decision on whether to prosecute the directors and others in connection with the alleged fraud by Postal Centres International Ltd. of Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No papers in relation to this matter have been referred to the Crown Prosecution Service. The liquidators appointed to handle the affairs of the company in liquidation have not reported finding evidence of any criminal offences.

Legal Aid Board

Mr. Jack: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor is able to announce when he will be appointing to the proposed Legal Aid Board; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has today appointed John Pitts, who retired last year as chairman and chief executive of the Tioxide Group, to be chairman of the proposed Legal Aid Board, and the following to be members:

Martin Acland
Diana Beale
Allan Blake
Hilary Bradley
Lyn Devonald
Kenneth Farrow
Suzette Harold
Geoffrey Hibbert
David Sinker
John Smith
Peter Soar

The Lord Chancellor regards it as important that the board should have adequate time in which to prepare for taking over responsibility for those functions currently exercised by the legal aid administration of the Law Society. The Lord Chancellor intends that this transfer should take place early in 1989. The appointments are, of course, contingent on the Legal Aid Bill's receiving the approval of Parliament.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers and Ancillary Staff (Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has in relation to the number of teachers and ancillary staff who have been vetted by police before they are employed in jobs where they work with children; and whether his Department keeps information as to the number of people refused employment and the reasons therefor.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department on 29 April, at column 283.

University Grants

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the percentage increase in grants to the universities for each year since 1974.

Mr. Jackson: Changes in grants made available to universities in Great Britain on the advice of the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board have been:

Financial year	Per cent. increase over previous year
1974-75	10·0
1975-76	25·0
1976-77	13·4
1977-78	10·2
1978-79	11·2
1979-80	21·8
1980-81	26·7
1981-82	3·0
1982-83	19·4
1983-84	3·5
1984-85	2·5
1985-86	3·1
1986-87	3·6
1987-88	[1]9·6
1988-89	[1]7·8

[1] Estimates.

Universities also receive public funds from other sources, notably through the home undergraduate tuition fee, where changes in practice create difficulties for year-on-year comparisons.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is in 1988 moneys the annual expenditure in civil research of the United Kingdom universities since 1974.

Mr. Jackson: The Department funds civil research in the universities through grants-in-aid to the research councils and the University Grants Committee's block grant. Where the latter is concerned, only a notional attribution of resources committed to research can be made, since universities' research activities and other expenditure (including teaching) cannot be clearly distinguished. The figures in the following table are therefore necessarily approximate.

No figures are available for the notional attribution to research of UGC funding prior to 1977-78. Since 1977-78, approximate total expenditure, at constant 1988-89 prices as measured by the GDP deflator, on civil research at United Kingdom universities through the research councils and the UGC is as follows:

	£ million
1977-78	741
1978-79	763
1979-80	800
1980-81	840
1981-82	838
1982-83	860
1983-84	859
1984-85	845
1985-86	848
1986-87	863
1987-88	856
1988-89	867

Statistics on funding of research in universities by other Government Departments can be found in the annual reviews of Government funded R and D.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the percentage increase in teachers' pay for each year since 1974.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 27 April, at columns 168-69.

Teacher Governors (Misconduct)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on how many occasions of which he is aware a school governing body or sub-committee of a school governing body has brought and heard charges of gross misconduct against a teacher employed at the school in respect of that teacher's actions as a governor of the school and not related to the teacher-governor's employment at the school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We are not aware of any such occasions. The meetings and proceedings of school governing bodies are governed by regulations made by my right hon. Friend. Under the current regulations a teacher or other governor is disqualified from continuing to hold that office in certain specified circumstances. However, the regulations make no provision for a governing body to hold a disciplinary hearing in relation to the actions of one of its members in that person's capacity as a governor.

Higher Education (Course Approval)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of Her Majesty's inspectors will be rendered redundant by the ending of the course approval system for higher education.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many (a) colleges of further education, (b) colleges of higher education, (c) polytechnics and (d) universities in England and Wales are actively engaged in ethnic monitoring with respect to (i) academic staff, (ii) support staff and (iii) the student body;

(2) how many (a) colleges of further education, (b) colleges of higher education, (c) polytechnics and (d) universities in England and Wales are actively engaged in ethnic monitoring in accord with guidelines currently laid down by the Commission for Racial Equality with respect to (i) academic staff, (ii) support staff and (iii) the student body.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected by my Department. However, a consultative document was issued by the Department on 8 March addressing the issues and options for consideration in the collection of ethnically-based statistics for students in further and higher education. The document sought views on the use of the Commission for Racial Equality guidelines for classification of ethnic origin.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on overall percentages of black lecturers in (a) colleges of further education, (b) colleges of higher education, (c) polytechnics and (d) universities.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected by my Department.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if UCCA and PCAS plan to include an ethnic monitoring question on their application forms for student entry to universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 13 April 1988, at column 135, in which it was reported that UCCA is considering the question of ethnic monitoring of university applicants. In addition, a response to the Department's consultative document on ethnic monitoring of students in further and higher education has now been received from PCAS indicating its willingness to discuss the proposal with the Department.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when his Department will publish the progress report on the implementation of equal opportunities policies for women in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: The report is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

Selection and Promotion

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if there have been any changes in the principles underlying selection for and promotion in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: No. Entry to and promotion in the Civil Service continue to be based on selection on merit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Trafficking

95. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about progress the Government are making both bilaterally and multilaterally in controlling the international trade in drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive occasional representations about the need for international co-operation in the fight against drug trafficking. The Government have helped in achieving progress on a number of fronts: in the United Nations, by our support for its drugs agencies and for current work on a draft convention against trafficking; at regional level through our chairmanship of the Council of Europe's co-operation group on drugs (the Pompidou group); and by various forms of bilateral co-operation, including the provision of financial assistance for drug producing and transit countries and negotiations to conclude agreements with other countries for the enforcement of court orders to confiscate traffickers' assets.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of stay of prioners held on remand who are transferred from London courts to police stations in (a) the Doncaster area and (b) nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The infor.nation requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Passports

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 592, whether he has any plans to allow persons applying for passports to have the option of either an old-style British passport or a new-style European Community format passport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Retention of the old form of passport after computerisation of the United Kingdom passport offices would lead to confusion, inefficiency and additional expense. The public would lose the advantages of a fully computerised passport-issuing service and of having a pssport which is machine-readable.

Police (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the level of his Department's funding of the Greater Manchester police in real terms during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office meets, through police specific grant, 51% of police authorities' expenditure for police purposes. An additional contribution is made from central funds through block grant. We have no plans to review this level of funding.

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet decided in which areas the initial safer cities programme will operate; what the total cost of this initial phase will be; how much of this represents new expenditure by his Department; and what vote the remaining expenditure will come from.

Mr. Hurd: We aim to establish 20 safer cities projects over the next three years: eight in 1988-89; eight in 1989-90; and four in 1990-91. Each will be located in an urban programme area where there are serious crime problems, and where other central Government programmes have been targeted. My hon. Friend the Minister of State announced on 7 April, when visiting the west midlands, that Wolverhampton is to be the first safer cities project area. Other areas will be invited to join the safer cities programme soon. Decisions about the location of projects will be made only after consultation with the appropriate local authority, the police and probation services and other local interests. Provision for the initial phase of the programme (1988-89) is £2·9 million. This will be met from the Home Office Vote (class XI, vote 3) and all of it represents new expenditure.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will construct a table showing the average number of doses of drugs administered per inmate in each of Her Majesty's penal establishments in the last available year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1988, c. 706]: I am grateful to the hon. Member for drawing attention to an inaccuracy in that part of the information in my earlier reply which related to Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield.

The pharmacist at Wakefield is responsible for dispensing not only at that establishment but at six other establishments and his returns, on which my reply was based, represent the doses of medicine administered at the seven establishments. The information relating solely to Her Majesty's prison Wakefield is as follows:

Number of doses of medicine administered to inmates in prison service establishments in England and Wales 1 April 1986-31 March 1987

	HMP Wakefield
1. Medicines available without prescription in the community	157,084
Prescription only medicines
2. Psychotropic drugs (ie antidepressants, sedatives and tranquillisers)	49,925
3. Hypnotic Drugs	16,837
4. Drugs acting on the central nervous system other than those shown in (2) and (3)	13,825
5. Other drugs and medicines	347,713

TRANSPORT

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of child pedestrian road fatalities, in total and expressed in relative terms, in each member state of the European Community within the age ranges five to nine, 10 to 14 and 15 to 17, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of deaths in each member state of the European Community is as follows for 1979 to 1986 inclusive. Data for other years could be made available only at disproportionate cost. Most countries use the standard international definition of "road accident death", which is dying within 30 days as result of the road accident. The exceptions are France (death within six days of the accident), Greece (death within three days), Italy (death within seven days) and Spain (death within 24 hours).

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatal accidents involving heavy lorries have occurred on the A1 in Northumberland in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been 10 such accidents in the period from 1 January 1983 to date.

The figures are as follows:

	Number
1983	1
1984	2
1985	2

Dial-a-Ride (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking an increase of funding for London Dial-a-Ride to enable it to provide one trip a week to each of its registered users; and what response he has made.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of letters from Members of Parliament, voluntary organisations and private individuals concerning the "one trip a week" campaign by the London Dial-a-Ride User's Association. In replying I have pointed out that funding has already been increased from £4·2 million in 1985-86 to £6·27 million in 1988-89 and this has provided for a substantial expansion of Dial-a-Ride services. London Regional Transport believes that there is still considerable scope for increasing service provision within existing resources by more cost-effective operation. We would expect that to be fully exploited before substantial increases in resources are sought.

Israel (Flights)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that security staff handling passengers on flights from United Kingdom airports to Israel do not question the political beliefs of passengers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not require passengers flying to Israel or anywhere else to be questioned about their political beliefs.

It is open to airlines to add further security measures if they consider them necessary to protect their operations.

Miracle Bus Company

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he was first advised of the problems facing the Southend council and the Miracle Bus Company in securing permission from the West German Government to provide a bus from Ostend to West Germany to connect with a plane from Southend airport; and if he will set out the actions taken by his Department since that time.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department first became aware of these problems in December 1985. Since then we have been engaged in correspondence and discussions with the authorities in Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and the European Commission to secure authorisation for the operation of the service. I understand that it is now due to come into operation towards the end of this month.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Swaziland

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment is available to him of the level of economic growth in Swaziland in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: The rate of economic growth in Swaziland, as measured by the estimated growth in the gross domestic product, is as follows for each year since 1983.

Percentage Growth Rate of GDP in Current Prices

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the extent to which Swaziland has benefited from joining the Lomé convention and giving improved access to European Community markets.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the five years to 1990 Swaziland will get 26 million ecu (about £18 million) in planned aid from the European development fund, in addition to benefiting from SADCC and other regional projects. Swaziland also receives lending from the European Investment Bank, finance under the STABEX scheme, and emergency aid.

Under the Lomé convention, Swaziland's industrial products and the great majority of her agricultural products can enter the Community free of tariff or other restrictions. Swaziland also benefits from the special provisions of the Lomé convention relating to sugar and beef. Under the sugar protocol, Swaziland may export annually up to 117,844·5 tonnes to the Community at a guaranteed price, which is currently about three times the world market price; and under an exchange of letters annexed to the convention Swaziland can export annually up to 3,363 tonnes of beef and veal to the Community.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current development projects in Swaziland for which United Kingdom national, Commonwealth or European Community assistance is given, and the value of that assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under the bilateral aid programme to Swaziland, Britain is currently financing the following projects:

Product	£ million
Water scheme for rural areas	0·55
Land purchase and development	2·00

In addition, we expect to spend about £2 million in 1988-89 on technical co-operation activities.

The Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation is currently financing, with grants estimated at £269,000, a number of technical co-operation projects in Swaziland.

Projects in Swaziland currently being financed by the European Community under the second and third Lomé conventions are as follows:

	£ million
Grant funding
Rural water supplies	1·69
Teacher Training College (Ngwane and Piggs Peak)	1·24
Smallholders support project (credit and marketing)	2·45
Integrated development of trade and tourism in handicrafts	1·86
Micro projects	0·56
Technical assistance (Rural Development Areas Programme; Swazi Development and Savings Bank; Co-operatives and Credit Union; Department of Economic Planning; Customs and Excise)	1·69
Development of Matsapha airport	1·45
Agricultural training (SADCC)	0·74
Training of customs officers	0·35
Regional training (SADCC)	0·28
Waterford Kambaa School	0·22
Regional railways training	0·16
Maths and Science teacher training	1·59
Swazi Industrial Development Corporation	0·84
Special loan funding
Vocational training centre (Matsapha Manzini)	2·21
Swazi Investment and Development Corporation (SINDECO)	2·07
Total	19·40

The United Kingdom share of European Community aid listed above is £3·2 million.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom contributions to Swaziland through national, Commonwealth and European Community action in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

£000s

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Gross United Kingdom bilateral aid[1]	5,665	5,626	3,376	7,722

[2] Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation; figures cover the period July-June.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to assist the Swaziland Government to strengthen their national economy and decrease their dependence on the economy of the Republic of South Africa;

(2) if he will make a statement on her Majesty's Government's policy on the role of the Southern African Development Co-ordination conference as an agency for diminishing Swaziland's economic dependence on the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: One of the principal aims of our bilateral aid programme to Swaziland is to strengthen the national economy. In addition we support the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which Swaziland is a member.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment is available to him of Swaziland's repayment of foreign debt; and to which countries payments are in arrears.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures show the debt service payment which were due and estimates of the actual payments made on public and publicly guaranteed debt from 1985 to 1987. I am not aware of any countries which have failed to receive repayments due from Swaziland.

Middle East

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the level and nature of medical aid from Her Majesty's Government to the Palestinians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Last year we provided £650,000 to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency and the International Committee of the Red Cross for their programmes in Lebanon, which included medical assistance. In addition, we have recently committed some £104,000 through the Order of St. John and Oxfam for medical support in the occupied territories, including nursing, training, research, surgery and support for the mentally handicapped.

The European Community has allocated £270,000 in emergency aid, including medical supplies, to Palestinians since December 1987. Some 20 per cent. of the Community's programme is met from the British aid budget.

Ethiopia (Aid)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in view of the intransigence of the Ethiopian Government over famine relief operations in Tigré, Her Majesty's Government will consider increasing donations to the Relief Society of Tigré through the channel of British aid agencies.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are extremely concerned about the disruption of relief operations in Eritrea and Tigré as a result of the recent intensification of civil conflict and the Ethiopian Government's decision that most expatriate relief personnel must leave these regions. Our objective remains to provide humanitarian relief to the hungry, regardless of where they are.

NORTHERN IRELAND

South Down (Education)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the reorganisation and rationalisation of secondary school education in the controlled sector in the northern area of South Down; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. However, the South-Eastern education and library board is currently considering the matter.

SCOTLAND

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the reasons why kidney transplants have had to be discontinued at the Western infirmary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that the kidney transplantation programme at the Western infirmary is being carried out at broadly the same level as in previous years. The only constraint is the availability of donated organs.

National Health Service Property

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the National Health Service properties in Tayside which require work to be done as identified by the National Audit Office report of 28 March, HC 405; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which National Health Service properties in (a) Scotland and (b) Tayside do not comply with statutory and non-statutory building standards as outlined in the National Audit Office report of 28 March, HC 405;

(3) what is the estimated cost of work required to be carried out in Tayside health board properties as identified by the National Audit Office report of 28 March, HC 405.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Audit Office report on "Estate Management in the National Health Service" does not identify particular properties used by Tayside health board which require substantial maintenance work. The report stresses the importance of developing strategies to maintain the Health Service estate in an adequate condition. The comprehensive survey into the condition of all hospitals, carried out by health boards in Scotland during 1986-87, is in line with this recommendation.

In the survey, Tayside health board estimated that work costing £21·8 million was necessary, over the next 10 years, to maintain its buildings in an adequate condition. This estimate is now being scrutinised by the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Where health service premises are subject to statutory requirements, the various enforcement agencies ensure compliance. Beyond these statutory requirements, the Department has issued instructions to boards on a wide range of non-statutory standards.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the present pupil-teacher ratio for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional pupil-teacher ratios for 1987-88 are 20·2 in primary and 12·9 in secondary schools.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in Scottish further and higher education are between the ages of 16 and 18.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In session 1986-87 the number of students in vocational higher and further education in Scotland aged 16 to 18 inclusive was estimated to be 92,000. Of these, 34,100 were full-time or sandwich course students and 57,900 were part-time students.

Meat Firms (Redundancies)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had about redundancies in Scottish meat firms caused by Messrs Marks and Spencer transferring its purchases to Brazilian firms; and if the recent agreements at the European Council will result in Scottish meat firms receiving supplies at prices comparable to Brazil.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Marks and Spencer's decision should not affect Scottish meat firms generally, but will have an adverse impact on employment at one particular company, with whom officials are in close touch. The Government have discussed this problem with the European Commission, which recently stated at a meeting of the Agriculture Council that it recognised the need to ensure that additional supplies of beef are available to the Community's meat processing industry on terms that enable Community production to be competitive with products from other sources.

Infertility

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an official survey into infertility provision within the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have for some time recognised the importance of developments in the alleviation of infertility. However, we take the view that we cannot contemplate a review of infertility services in Scotland until such time as consideration has been completed of the recommendations of the Warnock report on "Human Fertilisation and Embryology".

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what current research is being undertaken into the needs of the infertile in Scotland;

(2) what Government funded research is being undertaken into infertility services in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department is not currently funding any research specifically on infertility services and the needs of the infertile. Some aspects of a current research project on well women clinics may, however, have a bearing on this, and previously funded research on male infertility has been incorporated within the service provided by one health board. So far as Government funded research into more fundamental aspects of infertility is concerned, the main focus of the Medical Research Council's work in this field is the reproductive biology unit based in Edinburgh.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds have been allocated in the past five years to health boards for the provision of National Health Services for the infertile in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No separate allocation of resources is made to health boards for the provision of infertility services. It is for each health board to decide within the available resources what priority should be given to the provision of such services.

Local Authority Employees (Audit Information)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take in the light of responses to his consultation paper in which he proposed to amend section 101(1) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 to restrict the rights of the public to inspect at the time of audit information which an authority holds about its employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided in the light of the responses received to his consultation paper to seek at the next convenient opportunity an amendment to section 101(1) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 so that all information relating to employees of local authorities, audited under part VIII of the 1973 Act, should be excluded from public inspection, except information about gross pay, allowances, bonuses and overtime payments, which would continue to be open to inspect at time of audit. My right hon. and learned Friend considers that such an amendment would strike an acceptable balance between safeguarding personal privacy and providing adequate public inspection to ensure proper accountability. It also corresponds with similar action being taken by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales.

Competitive Tendering

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a timetable for the implementation of competitive tendering procedures for individual local government services in the phasing programme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has now considered the responses to the consultation paper on implementation of competition for Scottish local authority services issued in November. He has decided to confirm the proposal of a phased introduction of competition by local authorities with authorities split into groups and each group taking the activities covered by the Act in a different order. The groups of authorities will be the same as set out in the consultation paper. The date by which authorities will have had to have exposed their first activities to competition will be set at 1 August 1989, to allow adequate time for all stages of the competitive process to be completed.

Two other changes to the implementation proposals have been made which will help ensure efficient implementation of the competition process. These take account of the fact that a decision on the possibility of adding sport and leisure management to the list of defined activities has not yet been taken, and therefore, if this activity is added by order, some delay in implementing competition for it is inevitable.

My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to confirm the £100,000 de minimis level below which authorities' services would be exempt from competition. He has considered very carefully the position of the islands councils, but has concluded that no form of exemption is to be given to them at this stage. Their position will, however, be carefully monitored through a research project which will evaluate the effect of competition.

These decisions are described fully in letters which are today being sent to all affected authorities and other bodies covered by part I of the Act and copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Community Care

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will issue guidelines to social fund officers to accept applications for community care grants for domestic alarm installation, including telephone socket costs, to enable residents on benefit to continue to stay at home and out of long-stay residential institutions.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

No. When considering such applications social fund officers will exercise their discretion in the light of general guidance and the Secretary of State's directions in the "Social Fund Manual". Local authorities have powers to supply and meet the costs of alarms for elderly, sick or disabled people. Housing benefit (or, for owner-occupiers, income support) may be available in certain circumstances to help with the running costs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Televising of Proceedings

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will arrange for a copy of the video recording shown to the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House produced by the Central Office of Information and showing a compendium of televised proceedings of overseas Parliaments to be (a) made available to right hon. and hon. Members and (b) shown in the Jubilee Room for Members of both Houses and the media.

Mr. Wakeham: I am placing a copy of the video recording in the Library, where it will be accessible to Members by arrangement with the staff of the Library.

Press Bar

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the annual turnover of the Press Bar of the House of Commons; who is permitted to use the bar; whether a loss or profit was made in the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The Press Bar's turnover for the 12 months ended 31 March 1988, excluding VAT, was £38,790; the gross profit for the same period was £14,935. A profit was made during each of the last five years. Those permitted to use the Press Bar are: Parliamentary Lobby journalists and their guests, overseas press officers, Hansard staff, and staff posted to the Press Gallery.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the number of accredited journalists entitled to use the Press Bar of the House of Commons.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest Pass Office figures show that 393 accredited journalists are entitled to use the bar in the Parliamentary Press Gallery premises.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC (Foreign Policies)

16. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I met my colleagues from the Twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters at an informal weekend meeting in Konstanz on 5-6 March, and again at a ministerial meeting on 22 March in Brussels. I next expect to discuss these matters on 13 June in Luxembourg.

World Debt

18. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet other Foreign Ministers to discuss world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told the hon. Member on 3 February, my right hon. and learned Friend and I regularly meet our counterparts from other countries. Debt is frequently discussed, particularly with the Foreign Ministers of debtor nations and of major creditor nations.

Malaysia

19. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Malaysian Government.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Malaysia, Singapore and Brunei from 5 to 10 April. We enjoy close and developing relations with all three countries. In Malaysia he had valuable discussions with the Deputy Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and the Minister for Education on bilateral links and a range of regional and international issues.

As part of our common stand on drugs issues, we agreed in principle to work for a reciprocal agreement on the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets.

Central America

20. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies are currently being pursued by Her Majesty's Government to establish peace in central America.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have repeatedly expressed our support for the Guatemala peace agreement and urged the Central American Governments to fulfil their commitments under that agreement. We have appealed to countries with links and interests in the region to lend constructive support for the peace efforts of the Central American countries. We have also condemned all acts of violence which might jeopardise the peace process. We have warmly welcomed the 60-day truce signed at Sapoa on 23 March as a positive step towards the achievement of peace and reconciliation and hope that it will facilitate the establishment of a pluralistic democracy in Nicaragua.

43. Mr. Michael Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a settlement in Central America of the conduct of the recent elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: The holding of elections in El Salvador was in keeping with the objectives of the Central American peace agreement, which we support, of establishing peace and democracy in the region.

53. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Central American peace plan; and what initiatives the Government are taking to encourage further developments.

70. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Central American peace plan; and what initiatives the Government are taking to encourage further developments.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have repeatedly expressed our support for the Guatemala peace agreement and urged the Central American Governments to fulfil their commitments under that agreement. We have appealed to countries with links and interests in the region to lend constructive support for the Central American peace process. We have also condemned all acts of violence which might jeopardise the peace process. We welcomed the 60-day truce signed at Sapoa on 23 March as a positive step towards peace and reconciliation within a pluralistic democracy in Nicaragua.

63. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Central America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Central America.

Chemical Weapons

21. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the limitation of chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: We are committed to the negotiation of an effectively verifiable and global ban on chemical weapons. Encouraging progress has been made at the negotiations in Geneva to this end. However, many complex details remain to be resolved, particularly on verification and arrangements for an international inspectorate, if we are to achieve an effective convention.

Middle East

22. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to discuss recent events in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. The Palestine Liberation Organisation is well aware why contact at this level remains difficult.

50. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his policy towards the response of the Israeli Government to the Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories.

67. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the Israeli Government about the deaths and injuries inflicted by Israeli troops on Palestinians in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

76. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any recent representations to the Government of Israel about the security situation in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the situation in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly urge Israel to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law and human rights standards. We particularly deplore the use of live ammunition, deportations and collective punishments, and other excessive measures of repression.

South Africa

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with the Government of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain regular contact with the South African authorities, both here and via Her Majesty's ambassador, on a wide range of issues.

48. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria influence his decision to talk to, and acknowledge, some black South African leaders and not others.

90. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria influence his decision to talk to and acknowledge some leaders in South Africa and not others.

Mrs. Chalker: Our policy is to maintain contact with a wide cross-section of black South African opinion.

56. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further response he has received from the South African Government to his representations on behalf of the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: A defence application for a retrial is currently under consideration. We continue to follow the progress of the case closely and with concern.

Poland (Human Rights)

24. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding human rights in Poland.

Mr. Mellor: My colleagues and I have received many representations on this subject. The concern expressed in all parts of the House about human rights in Poland is fully reflected in representations we made to the Polish authorities, sometimes with our Community partners. During the visit of the Polish Foreign Minister last December, for instance, my right hon. and learned Friend made it clear that we hoped all forms of harassment of Solidarity supporters would cease.

Palestinians (Assassinations)

25. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made representations to the Government of Israel about the recent assassinations of Palestinians in Tunis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

35. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about their recent act of state terrorism in Tunis.

40. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel about the killing of Palestinians in Tunisia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Gulf War (Chemical Weapons)

26. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions his Department intends to take in response to the recent use of chemical weapons in the Gulf war.

Mr. Mellor: We abhor the use of chemical weapons by any country in contravention of the 1925 Geneva protocol. As far as the Iran/Iraq conflict is concerned, we have made our views abundantly clear to those concerned when chemical weapons have been used. We and our European Community colleagues issued a condemnatory statement on 24 March. More recently, on 29 March the Iraqi ambassador in London was told of the British Government's own condemnation of Iraqi use in Kurdistan in mid-March.

The Secretary General's investigative team has confirmed that chemical weapons were used then. We shall be studying the report very closely but are deeply concerned that the investigation has shown that these weapons continue to be used in the conflict.

We have been willing to allow CW victims to receive specialist private hospital treatment in this country for humanitarian reasons. This in no way prejudices our impartiality in the conflict itself. Eleven victims, six from Iran and five from Iraq, are receiving treatment following use of chemical weapons in Kurdistan.

Terrorism

27. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards achieving an international convention on terrorism.

Mr. Mellor: There already exist a number of international conventions dealing with various aspects of terrorist crime, including the Tokyo convention on offences and certain other acts committed on board aircraft, the Hague convention for the suppression of unlawful seizure of aircraft, the Montreal convention for the suppression of unlawful acts against the safety of civil aviation and the New York international convention against the taking of hostages. Opportunities to supplement these conventions are taken in the light of developments in the continuing fight against terrorism. For example, a protocol to the Montreal convention, which extends the provisions of the convention to cover acts of violence at international airports as well as on board aircraft, was open for signature on 24 February 1988. I regret to say that by no means all countries have signed the conventions. We continue to press those which have not to do so.

Anglo-Turkish Relations

28. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Turkish relations.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain's relations with Turkey are excellent. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister paid a very successful visit to Turkey last month and President Evren will be making a state visit to Britain this summer. Trade is increasing and record numbers of Britons will visit Turkey this year.

Guatemala

29. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current human rights situation in Guatemala.

Mr. Eggar: A number of murders and kidnappings have occurred, although it is not clear to what extent they are criminally rather than politically motivated. We accept the view of the United Nations special expert on Guatemala that it is the Government's firm political will to ensure respect for human rights and that violations are not a result of Government policy.

75. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions were sent to the British embassy in Guatemala in connection with the return of the Guatemala exiles on Monday 18 April.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador was requested to monitor the situation carefully and to keep the Foreign and Commonwealth Office informed of developments.

Namibia

30. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position in relation to South Africa's unlawful occupation of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We believe that the South Africans should end their unlawful occupation of Namibia. We remain committed to Namibian independence on the basis of United Nations Security Council resolution 435 and without preconditions. We support efforts by the United Nations Secretary General and the United States Administration to secure the implementation of resolution 435.

41. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take to speed the implementation of United Nations resolution 435, calling for a South African withdrawal from Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to press South Africa to agree to the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 435.

Bophuthatswana

31. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of efforts by the Bophuthatswana Government to establish a multi-racial, democratic society which guarantees human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: The policy of apartheid applied in other parts of South Africa is not applied within Bophuthatswana. However, Bophuthatswana was created out of the republic of South Africa as a key element in the policy of separate development and we regard the territory as part of South Africa.

Moreover, there are persistent reports that non-Tswanas resident in Bophuthatswana are subject to discrimination. We also note that recent legislation restricts the exercise of certain individual rights.

36. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which he is receiving accurate and detailed information about the situation in Bophuthatswana from the British embassy in Pretoria.

46. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that the British embassy in South Africa obtains more accurate information about the situation in Bophuthatswana.

64. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that the British embassy in Pretoria obtains more accurate information about the situation in Bophuthatswana.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's embassy in South Africa already provides full and accurate information on all relevant aspects of the South African scene, including developments in Bophuthatswana.

73. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on efforts to establish within Bophuthatswana a multi-racial, democratic society which guarantees human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: Any assessment has to take into account that Bophuthatswana is an expression of the South African Government's policy of grand apartheid and that we do not recognise it or the other "independent" homelands.

The policy of apartheid applied in other parts of South Africa is not applied within Bophuthatswana but there are persistent reports that non-Tswanas resident in Bophuthatswana are subject to discrimination. We note that recent legislation restricts the exercise of certain individual rights.

Falkland Islands

32. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet members of the Falkland Islands Council.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet members of the Falkland Islands Council.

Foreign Affairs Council

33. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the most recent meetings of the EC Foreign Affairs Council.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 27 April, at column 156.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

34. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament following the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Brussels summit.

Mr. Mellor: Four representations have been received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the NATO summit. These have covered the following subjects:

The NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting, 27-28 April;
The use of chemical weapons in the Gulf conflict (two representations);
The third United Nations special session on disarmament.

Israel

37. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in the light of the current situation on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, if he will give consideration to applying selective economic sanctions against Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Economic sanctions would not help bring about a solution of the problems of the region.

80. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the recent Israeli terrorist activity in Tunisia has affected Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a settlement in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We remain determined to work for a peaceful settlement of the Arab/Israeli conflict. Violence and terrorism offer no solution to the problems of the middle east.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Israel.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We have always wanted to see Israel safe and secure. But Israel's own recent actions have made it more difficult for her friends to help her to achieve those objectives. We shall go on trying, not least by promoting the peace process. We hope that Israel will reciprocate those efforts. In particular, we urge Israel to make clear that she accepts that the only way for her to achieve lasting security is to endorse the principle of territory for peace.

Southern Africa Front-line States

38. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he met the ambassadors of the Southern Africa front-line states.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the high commissioners/ambassadors of the front-line states collectively. However, I met the high commissioners of Zambia, Tanzania, Botswana and the Angolan charge and Nigerian counsellor on 16 March at their request to discuss the front-line states position on sanctions against South Africa.

Dalai Lama

39. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Dalai Lama; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has never met the Dalai Lama.

Inter-Parliamentary Union (Guatemala)

42. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the leader of the recent Inter-Parliamentary Union delegation to Guatemala to discuss the outcome of the meeting between the British and Argentinian delegations at this conference.

Mr. Eggar: The delegation called on me yesterday, 3 May, to discuss various aspects of the Inter-Parliamentary Union conference, including the meeting with the Argentine delegation.

Anglo-Algerian Relations

44. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Algerian relations.

Mr. Mellor: Relations between Britain and Algeria are becoming closer. I visited Algeria last September and the first meeting of the United Kingdom/Algerian joint commission took place in February. Both sides are agreed on the need to maintain this trend. The Algerian Foreign Minister has accepted an invitation to visit the United Kingdom, on dates yet to be fixed.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

45. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Sectetary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to attend the conference in Vienna on security and co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Mellor: I visited the Vienna CSCE meeting on 15 April. A copy of my speech has been placed in the Library. We will consider further ministerial visits to the meeting, including for the purpose of signing a concluding document, in the light of circumstances at the time.

Anglo-Soviet Relations

47. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's recent initiative to improve relations with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Mellor: Anglo-Soviet relations are better than for many years, with an active high level dialogue. Fundamental differences between us remain but we are able to discuss these frankly and look for solutions wherever possible. We aim to secure progress in arms control and the settlement of regional conflicts; much greater respect for human rights; an increase in trade; and more contacts between peoples at all levels. We shall continue to work for further improvement in bilateral relations.

59. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about Her Majesty's Government's current relations with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly receive letters from right hon. and hon. Members and members of the public about Anglo-Soviet relations. The views we receive are reflected, where appropriate, in our dealings with the Soviet authorities, where we are seeking to improve relations further, including progress in Soviet respect for human rights, arms control measures and the settlement of regional conflicts.

Chief Minister of Gibraltar

49. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of his recent talks with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I had a useful initial exchange of views with the new Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 12 April. We discussed a wide range of subjects of mutual interest.

Foreign Minister (China)

51. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Minister of China; and what was discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend had talks with the then Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian on 10 and 11 March during his visit to the United Kingdom. Their agenda covered a wide range of bilateral and international subjects, including East-West relations, disarmament, the middle east and Hong Kong. He has yet to meet the new Foreign Minister, Qian Qichen.

Anglo-Mexican Relations

52. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about current Anglo-Mexican relations.

Mr. Eggar: We enjoy excellent bilateral relations with Mexico. This is reflected in recent ministerial exchanges, which will continue with my visit to Mexico City from 1 to 3 June.

El Salvador

54. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a settlement in Central America of the conduct of recent elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: The holding of elections in El Salvador was in keeping with the objectives of the Central American peace agreement, which we support, of establishing peace and democracy in the region.

Republic of Ireland (Counter-terrorist Policy)

55. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland about the implications for counter-terrorist policy of that country's trading links with Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Irish Government are fully alive to the threat posed to both our countries by Libya's active support for terrorism. We have discussed this with them on a number of occasions recently, particularly in the context of increased security co-operation following the seizure of MV Eksund last October which revealed extensive Libyan support for the Provisional IRA.

EC Structural Funds

57. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of European Community structural funds is due to be spent in Britain for the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: The detailed arrangements for structural fund spending for the current year are still under discussion. We cannot therefore say what proportion is likely to be spent in the United Kingdom.

Poland

58. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Polish Government.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend had several hours of useful discussion with the Polish Foreign Minister, Professor Orzechowski, during his visit to London from 6 to 10 December.

Denmark

60. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Danish ambassador, and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has frequent occasion to meet the Danish ambassador informally, but has not received a call from him on official business for some time.

Guatemala and Belize

61. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on further progress in the territorial dispute between Guatemala and Belize; and what action the Government are taking to assist such progress.

Mr. Eggar: The territorial dispute is a matter for bilateral settlement between Belize and Guatemala. We wish to see the dispute resolved at an early date and are ready to assist the parties directly involved by being present at negotiations if both sides so wish.

Kampuchea

62. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will make it their policy to vote later in 1988 for the recognition by the United Nations of the Coalition Government of Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have consistently voted in favour of United Nations resolutions which have reaffirmed the need to adhere to the principles of the United Nations; and which call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Cambodia and the right of the Cambodian people to self-determination, free from outside interference. There has been no vote on the question of Cambodian representation at the United Nations since 1982.

94. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards recognition of the coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, with particular regard to the right to sit at the United Nations.

Mr. Eggar: Our policy is to recognise states, not governments. We have no dealings with either of the two rival Cambodian regimes as Governments. We support the retention by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea of the Cambodian seat at the United Nations in line with the recommendations of the Credentials Committee.

Single European Market

65. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the opportunities provided for business and trades unions by the single European market.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are in regular contact with a number of business organisations and representative bodies about the completion of the single European market and the opportunities it affords for British businesses and for job opportunities.

74. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Lord Cockfield to discuss the completion of the internal European market.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Lord Cockfield to talk about the single market on 18 November last year. He will be meeting him again shortly to discuss a number of issues including completion of the single market.

EC Foreign Ministers

66. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to discuss political co-operation with EEC Foreign Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met colleagues from the twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters at an informal weekend meeting in Konstanz on 5-6 March, and again at a ministerial meeting on 22 March in Brussels. He expects to discuss these matters with them next on 13 June in Luxembourg.

Atlantic Alliance

68. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made within the Western European Union to strengthen the European pillar of the Atlantic Alliance.

Mr. Mellor: Work is continuing on developing the Western European Union platform, on examining European security issues and on concerting policy on issues outside the NATO area affecting common security interests.

Persian Gulf

69. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position in the Persian Gulf.

71. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: The situation in the Gulf is relatively quiet at the moment. Since 18 April there has been only one attack on merchant shipping. Events on 18 April reminded Iran that she cannot expect to endanger the lives and interests of non-belligerents with impunity. The Armilla patrol, British minesweepers and other friendly navies in the area continue to contribute to maintaining freedom of navigation with a high level of vigilance.

Cyprus

72. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Cypriot relations.

Mrs. Chalker: Anglo-Cypriot relations are good. My right Friend the Prime Minister held friendly and useful talks with President Vassiliou on 31 March.

79. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for settlement of the Cyprus dispute.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to hope that the United Nations Secretary-General will be able to find a basis for the resumption of inter-communal talks. Good will gestures by both sides would facilitate his task.

Ethiopia

77. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Ethiopian Government about human rights issues in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: Over the years we have made numerous representations. Most recently my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development took the matter up with the Ethiopian Deputy Prime Minister during a visit to Ethiopia in January. We shall continue to raise the subject at every suitable opportunity.

Afghanistan

78. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to pay an official visit to Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Panama

81. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there have been any discussions with the United States Government concerning the current situation in Panama.

85. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there have been any discussions with the United States Government concerning the current situation in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: The situation has been discussed in the course of our normal contacts with the United States Government.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there have been any discussions with the United States Government concerning the current situation in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: The situation in Panama has been discussed in the course of our normal contacts with the United States Government.

Commonwealth Countries (Nuclear Policy)

82. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Commonwealth states have policies of refusing access to nuclear-armed or nuclear-powered aircraft or naval vessels.

Mr. Mellor: New Zealand is the only Commonwealth country whose current policy in relation to declarations on the presence of nuclear weapons prevents visits by Royal Navy ships.

Hong Kong

83. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about progress with the transition to Chinese sovereignty in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no representations on the general question of the transition in Hong Kong. Good progress is being made in the implementation of the Sino-British joint declaration. The Sino-British joint liaison group and the Land Commission have held successful meetings, and have concluded agreements on a number of important issues which will facilitate a smooth transfer of Government in 1997.

USSR

84. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet his Soviet counterpart to discuss nuclear matters.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has had a series of meetings with Mr. Shevardnadze, most recently at Brize Norton in December and during his visit to Moscow in February, when they covered the full range of nuclear and arms control issues. No date has yet been fixed for their next meeting.

Nicaragua

86. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a settlement of the conflict in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: We have consistently advocated a peaceful negotiated solution to the region's problems. Together with our European partners we warmly welcomed both the Guatemala peace agreement and the 60-day cease-fire agreement signed by the Government of Nicaragua and the Contras at Sapoa on 23 March. We hope negotiations for a definitive cease-fire now under way will lead to peace and reconciliation within a pluralistic democracy in Nicaragua.

Federal Republic of Germany

88. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has frequent occasion to meet the ambassador informally, but no immediate plans to meet him on official business.

Chile

89. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the imprisonment of the former Chilean Foreign Secretary, Clodomiro Almeyda.

Mr. Eggar: On 19 April, Sr. Clodomiro Almeyda's brother met officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. He asked that Her Majesty's Government should intervene on his brother's behalf. He was informed that the Chilean Government are already well aware of our concern about Sr. Almeyda.

West Indies

91. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to pay an official visit to the West Indies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to pay an official visit to the West Indies.

Human Rights

92. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Vienna Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe conference has so far yielded any advances in the area of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Advances have been distinctly modest so far. When I addressed the Vienna CSCE meeting on 15 April, I made it clear that we could not conclude business without much more progress on human rights issues.

Nigeria

93. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom-Nigeria relations.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told my hon. Friend on 3 February, the United Kingdom enjoys close and cordial relations with Nigeria. These were again demonstrated at the bilateral talks which my right hon. and learned Friend and I had with the Nigerian Foreign Minister at Chevening on 15 and 16 March.

Singapore

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Singaporean relations.

Mr. Eggar: Our relations with Singapore are excellent. My right hon. and learned Friend visited Singapore from 7 to 9 April as part of a wider tour of south-east Asia, which also included visits to Malaysia and Brunei. He had valuable discussions with Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew, Deputy Prime Ministers Goh Chok Tong and Ong Teng Cheong, and with Foreign Minister Dhanabalan on bilateral links and a range of regional and international issues.

Gibraltar (Checkpoints)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to assess whether the border checkpoints on Gibraltar are working effectively and that staff are able and have powers to detain persons where this is considered necessary.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied with the effectiveness of the frontier controls. We are currently looking for ways of streamlining them.

Gibraltar (Police)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to assess the adequacy of the police establishment on Gibraltar; and what is the current approved establishment and actual staff in post.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied with the police establishment in Gibraltar, which is kept under continuous review. The approved establishment is 232 and there are currently 230 staff in post.

Miracle Bus Company

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was first notified of the problems facing the Southend council and the Miracle Bus Company in securing permission from the West German Government to provide a bus from Ostend to Germany to connect with a plane from Southend airport; and if he will set out the action taken by his Department since that time.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department was first informed of the problems involved in setting up this service to Frankfurt in June 1986. Since then we have held many discussions with the German and Belgium authorities and with the European commission. Agreement was subsequently reached that the service should be authorised and I understand the British operator hopes to start the service at the end of this month.

Irish Trust (Residual Funds)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the transfer of residual funds from the Irish Sailors' and Soldiers' Land Trust has been completed; to what extent this has benefited, or will benefit, the Royal National Lifeboat Institution in the island of Ireland; and if he will convey to Mr. Charles Haughey the appreciation of Her Majesty's Government of his interest in the matter.

Mrs. Chalker: The first (and major) tranche of surplus funds from the Irish Sailors' and Soldiers' Land Trust, £4·5 million, has been distributed in accordance with the 1987 Act. The distribution of the Irish Government's share is a matter for that Government, but I understand that they plan to pass a portion of the money to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution (Ireland). I am happy to record the appreciation of Her Majesty's Government at this development.

DEFENCE

Ex-departmental Staff (Appointments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff have left his Department and taken up employment in the private defence industry, for each year from 1979 to date; and what were the grades involved.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total number of approvals by grade to take up employment in defence industries since 1979 is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	[1]1988

3. The figures record the number of approvals given to prospective appointments; records do not exist of those appointments actually accepted.

Prisoners of War, Wormhoudt

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in assessing the papers relating to the killing of 80 British prisoners of war captured in 1940 near the French village of Wormhoudt, near Dunkirk; what discussions he has had with others on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department announced on 21 April, we are examining the records relevant to the killing of the British prisoners of war in 1940 near Wormhoudt as a matter of urgency. We are in close touch with other interested Departments.

Chipmunk

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours of Royal Air Force initial training are currently carried out on the de Havilland Chipmunk aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Four thousand two hundred and fifty hours were flown on the de Havilland Chipmunk aircraft during elementary flying training in the year ending 31 March 1988.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many de Havilland Chipmunk aircraft are currently in Royal Air Force service.

Mr. Freeman: There are 77 Chipmunk aircraft currently in service with the RAF.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the de Havilland Chipmunk entered Royal Air Force service.

Mr. Freeman: The Chipmunk entered service with the RAF in February 1950.

Targeting Pods

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to order night vision targeting pods for Royal Air Force Tornado and Harrier GR5 aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following a competition, a contract for development and production of a night vision forward-looking infra-red system for Tornado GR1 and Harrier GR5 aircraft was awarded to GEC Sensors of Basildon in December 1985.

The competiton to select an advanced laser designator pod, a targeting aid for installation on Tornado GR1 aircraft, is in its final stages. There is no requirement for this system to be fitted on Harrier GR5 aircraft.

Nimrod

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is considering the conversion of Nimrod AEW aircraft for use as tankers.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is one of a number of possibilities we are considering for utilising the Nimrod AEW airframes, but no decision has yet been taken.

Trident

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total expenditure to date on the building of a road network for the establishment of a Trident base on the Clyde.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 3 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 4 March 1988 at column 687.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his counterparts from the other European Community countries; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 20 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), at columns 505-6.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the restrictions placed on the movement of sheep following the Chernobyl disaster and concerning compensation to those farmers affected by the restrictions.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received representations from the Cumbria branch of the National Farmers Union, which sent to the Ministry's Carlisle office the results of a survey it conducted concerning the operation of the sheep compensation scheme. The branch has listed 66 producers who feel that they have been inadequately compensated. Of the 66 producers, 57 have already received compensation under the arrangements totalling £78,447 up to April 1988. We have said all along that we would be prepared to look at the scheme and its operation, which has been discussed in detail with the farmers' unions before and following the introduction of the various elements. As a result, changes have been made to some aspects of the scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has evidence of an increase in mutations of lambs born in the restricted area of Cumbria since the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Congenital defects in lambs may be caused by a variety of factors, including environmental agents, nutritional deficiencies and viral infections. We are advised that the annual dose of radiation to sheep in Cumbria is within the normal range of background radiation in the United Kingdom. There is no reason to believe that the levels of contamination from Chernobyl present a health hazard to sheep or that it will effect their fertility or breeding potential. There is no evidence that lambs born in the restricted area of Cumbria have a higher incidence of congenital defects than lambs born elsewhere.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being undertaken into the mutation of lambs born in the restricted area of Cumbria since the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I understand that a research project by Liverpool university into the effects of low-level radiation on sheep is being undertaken. I believe that the project is utilising sheep supplied by farmers in North Wales, but I am not aware that sheep have been supplied by farmers in the restricted area of Cumbria.

Surplus Food and Drink

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total volume and value in pound sterling of surplus food and drink in the EEC.

Mr. MacGregor: A note setting out the volume of EC intervention stocks of agricultural commodities, which is not necessarily the same as surplus food and drink, is deposited in the Library of the House and updated monthly. The estimated book value of the EC stocks, excluding depreciation, set out in the most recently deposited note is £4·8 billion.

Sheep

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet the farming unions to discuss the sheep sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I continue to maintain regular contacts with the farming unions and their representatives on matters relating to the sheep sector.

Inshore Fishermen

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of licences that can be issued to an inshore fisherman; and if he will list them.

Mr. Gummer: The restrictive licensing scheme does not differentiate between inshore and offshore fishermen. The number of licences issued to a fisherman depends on his eligibility and the fish stocks he wishes to catch.

Farm Incomes

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing at the latest available date (a) what proportion of farms derived all their income from agriculture; (b) what proportion of those farmers' earnings were from non-agricultural employment, investment and pensions in (i) England, (ii) the south-western region and (iii) each of the counties in that region.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest information available is from the Inland Revenue's "Survey of Personal Incomes, 1984/85", and is given in table 4.5 of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" 1988 edition. This shows that for those with a self-employment income from agriculture and horticulture in the United Kingdom:

(a) 15 per cent. had no other income than that arising from self-employment (virtually all from agriculture and horticulture) and,

(b) 30 per cent. had income from employment (in or out of agriculture) in addition to income from self-employment.

The further information requested is not available.

Milk

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on producer prices for milk at the latest available date in (a) Japan, (b) the European Community, (c) the United States of America and (d) New Zealand.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the table.

Beef

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of beef exported in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; which countries the exports were sent to; and what was the price of buying the meat into intervention and of subsidising its export, respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: 176,140 tonnes of beef were exported from the United Kingdom in 1987. The table gives details of destinations. In 1987, 20,406 tonnes of intervention beef were sold under sales which required the beef to be exported to third countries. This beef had been purchased during a period the prices paid for intervention ranged from £1,920/tonne to £2,140/tonne for steer carcases of R3 quality on the carcase classification scale. The total expenditure on refunds for all beef exports to third countries in 1987 (including sales from intervention and other exports as well) was £27,401,295.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent by the EEC in purchasing meat into public and private intervention over the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and how much was spent on storing and exporting such beef, respectively, during the same period.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Intervention purchases are paid for initially by the member state, but part of the storage and financing costs, as well as the eventual loss on sale, are borne by the European Community. Private storage aid is paid in full by the EC. No separate figures are kept for the cost of export refunds on beef which has been the subject of public intervention storage and aided private storage. 1986 figures are as follows:

	million ecus	£ million
Total intervention	2,030·5	1,315·5
Private storage	102·3	66·3
Public intervention	1,928·2	1,249·2

Figures are available only for 10 months of 1987, as follows:

	million ecus	£ million
Total intervention	1,050·3	756
Private storage	66·3	48
Public intervention	984·0	708

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current range of prices offered for the purchase of beef into intervention; and what are the comparable figures offered to traders for such beef to be exported, including any specific export subsidy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Prices for beef being bought into intervention in Great Britain range from £1,646·7/tonne to £1,717·8/tonne for straight cut forequarters depending on the quality.

Prices for sales for export from intervention stocks are currently:

	Tonne
Cuts	£710·55—£3,908
Forequarters	£426·33—£994·76
Hindquarters	£1,456·22—£1,598·73

In certain cases prices within these ranges are minimum prices for tender sales and actual prices paid may be higher.

Export refunds are payable only in respect of some sales from intervention stocks, these being generally the sales for which higher prices are sought. The rate varies according to the eventual destination of the beef but the range of rates for frozen beef (adjusted by MCAs) in the week ending 29 April are:

	tonne
Cuts	£185·50—£727·80
Forequarters	£185·50—£483·60
Hindquarters	£315·60—£794·00

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount of beef produced and consumed internally by the EEC; and if comparable figures are available for lamb and pork respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figures provided by the European Commission estimate the amount of beef produced and consumed in the EC in 1987 at 8,005,000 tonnes and 7,550,000 tonnes respectively. The equivalent estimates for mutton and lamb are 1,005,000 tonnes produced and 1,239,000 tonnes consumed, and for pigmeat 12,273,000 tonnes and 12,057,000 tonnes respectively.

EC Meat Exports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any record is kept of the meat which is exported from the EEC with subsidy and then returns to the United Kingdom for domestic consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Export refunds are available for beef, pigmeat and poultry and are paid only when proof is provided that the meat has been cleared through Customs for consumption in the country of destination.

Refunds are not generally payable for destinations which are significant exporters of beef to the Community. In 1986 when Brazil was suffering a meat shortage the Commission arranged tender sales of intervention beef to Brazil. A condition of these sales was that the beef should be imported by a Government agency, Interbras, and the Brazilian authorities gave an undertaking that the beef would be consumed there.

To ensure that exports of poultrymeat are not returned to the Community export refunds are related to the basic levies charged on all third country imports. The Community is not a significant importer of pigmeat.

Meat Prices

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the recent European Council agreement on agricultural spending will have the effect of making meat available to home manufacturers and canners at prices comparable to the prices offered to foreign canners.

Mr. Donald Thompson: When the Council of Agriculture Ministers agreed on the level of imports of beef under the manufacturing balance sheet at its meeting on 8 February the Commission gave an undertaking that it recognised the need to ensure that additional supplies of beef are available to the Community meat processing industry on terms that enable Community production to be competitive with products from other sources. The recent decisions taken on agricultural spending should not affect the ability of the Commission to discharge this undertaking.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badgers were removed in each of the parishes listed under his badger control strategy in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The numbers of badgers taken in parishes where, under the present control strategy, badgers may be removed automatically in the event of an unexplained herd breakdown due to bovine tuberculosis, are shown in the following table. The table excludes badgers taken in removal operations prior to adoption in April 1986 of the revised control strategy recommended in the Dunnet Report.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Taxation

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish tables comparable to those published to indicate the effect of the Budget income tax tables, continuing up to income of £2,000 per week, illustrating the tax and national insurance position of couples in 1989-90 both having income from employment and also where the wife's income is derived from investments and showing the tax and national insurance position and the resultant net income for couples over the same range of incomes after the introduction of independent taxation in 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Illustrative examples of the effects of independent taxation for non-aged taxpayers at various levels of income up to £2,000 per week are given in the tables. They are based on income tax and national insurance contribution rates for 1988-89. The tables include two illustrations of the possible distribution of the amount of income between husband and wife.

Government Departments and Agencies (Re-location)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments and agencies have been transferred from London and the south-east of England to the regions since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's dispersal programme since 1979 has included significant transfers of Civil Service posts from London to regions outside the south-east, by the following Departments and agencies:

Export Credits Guarantee Department (to Cardiff)
Health and Safety Executive (to Bootle)
Her Majesty's Stationery Office (to Norwich)
Home Office (to Bootle)
Manpower Services Commission (to Sheffield)
Ministry of Defence (to Glasgow)
Overseas Development Administration (to East Kilbride)
Property Services Agency (to Bootle)

Details of dispersals undertaken on Departments' own initiatives are not held centrally. However, Her Majesty's Land Registry opened a new office in Hull in 1987; the Department of Trade and Industry recently announced plans to relocate the Patent Office to Newport; and the Department of Health and Social Security has created a large number of new jobs at its Newcastle central office and at its family credit centre at North Fylde.

Interest Rates

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the level of interest rates in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

THE ARTS

Merseyside Arts Association

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will provide money additional to the 2 per cent. increase in development funds for the Merseyside regional arts associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 3 May 1988]: No. It is for the Arts Council to determine the distribution of its grant.

Distance Learning Scheme

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much money he has allocated to his Department's distance learning scheme.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Negotiations are continuing between the Arts Council and the Institute of Marketing, which are to provide the distance learning package. No figure has yet been agreed, but it is likely to be in the region of £100,000.

EMPLOYMENT

Availability for Work Test

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether individuals who are on the community programme who choose to leave when the adult training scheme is introduced in September will be liable to benefit loss under the availability for work test.

Mr. Nicholls: Participants who join the community programme (CP) from the end of February are entitled to six months on that programme. We have already made it clear that the new employment training programme is to be a voluntary one. Those CP participants who choose not to take advantage of the new programme at the end of their time on CP will not be liable to benefit loss under the availability for work test.

Inter-union Disputes

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans for further legislation to limit the effects of inter-union disputes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's largest 100 employers hold permits exempting them from the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944; how many of these (a) hold permits covering multiple outlets — operational sites and (b) do not hold exemption permits and who are failing to meet their quota obligations; and how such companies are being encouraged to meet their obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Lee: The information requested about the 100 largest employers is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In Great Britain the Department of Employment's employment service established a major organisations development unit in October 1987. This maintains contact with major employers at senior, head office, level and influences and assists large companies in the adoption of good practices in the employment of people with disabilities. At a local level, the employment service's disablement advisory service also promotes vigorously the employment of people with disabilities. In Northern Ireland these functions are undertaken by the Department of Economic Development's disablement resettlement officers.

South Korea

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many hours there are in the average working week in South Korea, and on the average wage there.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information relates to 1986 and is published by the International Labour Office in its "Yearbook of Labour Statistics 1987." In non-agricultural activities, average hours worked per week by employees are shown as 52·5 and average earnings per month as 350,966 Won, approximately £63 per week.

Retail Workers

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of workers in retail are (a) full-time and (b) part-time; and what were the comparable figures five years previously.

Mr. Lee: In December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the proportions of full-time and part-time employees in employment in the retail distribution industry in Great Britain were 54 per cent. and 46 per cent. respectively. There are no comparable estimates for December 1982 but comparable figures from the 1981 census of employment show that in September 1981 the proportions were 60 per cent. and 40 per cent. The figures have not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Training Schemes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if people who (a) complete a course on the adult training strategy and (b) come off training courses prior to completion will be entitled to claim unemployment or supplementary benefit.

Mr. Nicholls: People who have completed their time in employment training or have left the programme early and who have not secured a job will be entitled to claim unemployment benefit or income support provided that they meet the statutory conditions for entitlements to these benefits.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: There are now over 400 local enterprise agencies in the United Kingdom. This Department, through the local enterprise agency grant scheme, is encouraging the development of a network of viable agencies in England; 200 agencies were supported under the scheme in the 1987-88 financial year.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people took up offers under the enterprise allowance scheme during the past 12 months; and what plans he has for extending this scheme.

Mr. Cope: During the year April 1987 to March 1988, 106,305 people joined the scheme; 110,000 places will be available during the current year.

There are no plans at present to alter the main eligibility rules of the scheme.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged 16 to 18 years were unemployed in the London borough of Lewisham at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: On 14 January 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Lewisham aged 16 to 18 years was 1,004.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of persons under the age of 23 years, by sex, who have been registered as unemployed for (a) less than six months, (b) between six and 12 months and (c) more than 12 months.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available in the Library. Unemployment figures are not available for the age range requested. However, the table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants under 25 years, by sex and duration, in the United Kingdom on the latest date available, 14 January 1988.

Unemployed

	Male	Female	Total
Less than 6 months	315,330	205,569	520,899
6 to 12 months	97,328	60,279	157,607
Over 12 months	144,392	70,419	214,811
TOTAL	557,050	336,267	893,317

Family Expenditure Survey

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to issue further data from the 1986 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Cope: Yes. Since the report on the 1986 survey was published on 30 December 1987, it has been discovered that, because of a fault in a computer programme, average weekly household expenditure in 1986 was overstated by £6·92; the published figure is £185·02 whereas the revised estimate is £178·10.

An announcement of what has happened will appear in this month's Employment Gazette, together with revised data for broad groups of expenditure. The June Gazette will contain an article providing more detailed revised data.

Corrected results from the 1986 survey will be made available in early July, free of charge to those customers who have purchased a copy of the original report.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Staff

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number and cost of administrative and clerical staff employed in the National Health Service by each district health authority; and what is this cost expressed relative to the population in each district.

Mr. Newton: Information for district health authorities in England and which relates to 1986-87 (the latest years available) is shown in the table.

3. Each region's totals include figures for regional headquarters and unit staff in addition to the totals for the districts.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many individuals in the Crewe and Nantwich constituency have lost housing benefit since the change in the Social Security Act on 1 April; and what is the total amount of housing benefit lost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients have had their housing benefit (a) withdrawn or (b) reduced in the Wakefield metropolitan district.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether payments of transitional protection to claimants of housing benefit will be made as regular weekly payments or some other basis; and what period he expects a transitional protection certificate to cover;

(2) what further subsidy he is offering to local authorities to compensate them for the administration needed to implement the certification process associated with the scheme of transitional protection for housing benefit; when he expects the scheme to be in operation; and what guidance he has issued in the meantime to local authorities on collection of the new higher rent and rate payments due.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 May 1988.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have had their housing benefit (a) withdrawn or (b) reduced in the Walsall metropolitan borough.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 April 1988]: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state the number in each region of the United Kingdom who have had their housing benefit withdrawn because their savings exceed £6,000; and if he will also give the number who have had their housing benefit reduced because their savings exceed £3,000;

(2) if he will state the number of those who have lost housing benefit arising from the recent legislative changes in each region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 April 1988]: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Rates (Payments)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider for the elderly and disabled direct payments of rates from pensions to the appropriate authority.

Mr. Portillo: We have no plans to do so.

Methadone (Hydrochloride)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the amount of Methadone (Hydrochloride) prescribed in the National Health Service each year since 1975 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Newton: The number of prescriptions and the volumes of Methadone dispensed by community pharmacists in England in each of the years 1975 to 1986 inclusive is as follows:

Methadone (thousands) — England

Independent Living Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what he anticipates will be the number of claimants receiving help from the Independent Living Fund (a) in 1988-89 and (b) in a full year; and how these figures have been derived;

(2) whether payments from the Independent Living Fund will be treated as income for the purposes of calculating housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 3 May.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the £5 million budget for the Independent Living Fund he anticipates will be spent on administration.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 29 April at column 337.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether payments from the Independent Living Fund are available to claimants who were not receiving disability benefits prior to or on 11 April.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether community care grants from the social fund will be taken into account when assessing entitlement to a payment from the Independent Living Fund;

(2) whether he expects there to be (a) a maximum and (b) a minimum sum for a claim from the Independent Living Fund;

(3) how entitlement to payments from the Independent Living Fund will be calculated for (a) someone in receipt of income support and (b) someone not on income support.

Mr. Scott: These will be matters for the trustees to determine.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether applicants to the Independent Living Fund will routinely be referred to the social fund.

Mr. Scott: I expect the trustees will wish to inform applicants of their possible entitlement to other forms of help where appropriate. However the social fund cannot make payments for domestic assistance and respite care.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether applications to the Independent Living Fund will be accepted from people who have applied to the social fund and been refused a payment.

Mr. Scott: The eligibility criteria do not preclude payments to such people. It will be for the trustees to determine what weight is to be given to such factors.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he expects payments from the Independent Living Fund to be made from his Department's local offices; and whether payment will be by order book or giro.

Mr. Scott: Payments from the Independent Living Fund will not be made from the Department's local offices. It will be for the trustees to determine the method and frequency of payments.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Independent Living Fund will be able to make (a) one-off payments and (b) regular weekly payments; and for what period of time he envisages regular payments being made.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund is primarily intended to help severely disabled people pay for domestic or personal care. The fund's eligibility criteria do not place restrictions on the type of payments that may be made. It will be for the trustees to determine what form of payment is appropriate in each case.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether claimants will still be able to receive payments from the Independent Living Fund if they are (a) being cared for by someone receiving independent living assistance and (b) receiving any assistance from a local authority home help.

Mr. Scott: This will be a matter for the trustees to decide. However the Independent Living Fund's eligibility criteria provide that that part of personal care and domestic assistance provided by a local authority is not normally eligible for help from the fund.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what costs of disability will be covered by payments from the Independent Living Fund; and whether the fund will make payments to cover housing costs, debts or essential household equipment if these are judged necessary to prevent the claimant from entering an institution;

(2) what is the definition of living alone for the purposes of entitlement to payment from the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: These will be matters for the trustees to determine in the light of the eligibility criteria which were published in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 31 March at columns 659-60.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence claimants to the Independent Living Fund will be required to provide to support their claim; and whether they will be visited to assess that evidence.

Mr. Scott: The precise details will be for the trustees to determine. However it is envisaged that applicants will be visited by a social worker experienced in matters relating to disability to make an assessment of their care needs and offer other advice as appropriate.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for how long he anticipates the Independent Living Fund will be in existence.

Mr. Scott: I anticipate that the duration of the fund will be in the region of three to five years.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services from where he anticipates the Independent Living Fund will be administered; and where, once it is in operation, claimants will make application.

Mr. Scott: It is proposed that the Independent Living Fund will be administered from offices in Nottingham and that applications will be made by post to a PO box address. These arrangements are subject to ratification by the trustees.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects guidelines to be available for trustees of the Independent Living Fund; and whether they will be published.

Mr. Scott: The rules governing the operation of the Independent Living Fund will be set out in the fund's eligibility criteria and trust deed. The eligibility criteria were published in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 31 March at columns 659-60. The trust deed will be subject to approval by the Charity Commissioners and will be available for public inspection in the usual way.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the Independent Living Fund to be constituted; when he anticipates regulations covering its operation will be laid; and whether they will be available in draft for consultation or comment.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund will be constituted shortly. The provisions establishing the fund and the rules governing its operation will be contained in the trust deed, which will be subject to approval by the Charity Commissioners and available for public inspection in the usual way. Regulations will however be laid to ensure that payments from the fund are disregarded in calculating entitlement to income support, family credit, and housing benefit.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what briefing has been issued to local offices to enable them to advise claimants who should apply to the Independent Living Fund for assistance; what publicity his Department intends to give the fund; and what expenditure on that publicity will be.

Mr. Scott: A letter has been written to regional controllers drawing their attention to the purpose of the fund and advising that people enquiring in local offices about the fund should be instructed to write to its temporary address: c/o room 520 New court, Carey street, London, WC2A 2LS.

For details of other action undertaken or proposed to publicise the fund I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 29 April, at column 338. The publicity budget has not yet been settled.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the tear-off slip attached to form SB1(1988) will be accepted as a claim for income support.

Mr. Portillo: Yes.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are receiving full income support to cover (a) rest home fees and (b) nursing home fees.

Mr. Portillo: There were 84,500 people claiming supplementary benefit in residential care homes in May 1987, and 32,300 in nursing homes. Information is not available about the number of these receiving only supplementary benefit; many supplementary benefit or income support claimants have other income to help meet the fees of their home, including contributory or other benefits. For those who qualify, the income-related benefit is paid in addition to this up to prescribed limits.

Social Workers (Education and Training)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to respond to the proposals from the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work for reforms to the education and training for social workers and other care staff.

Mr. Newton: I wrote yesterday to Professor Saul setting out the Government's position in response to the proposals of "Care for Tomorrow". The letter indicates that, while the Government do not feel able to commit resources to the extension of qualifying training for social workers to three years, as proposed by CCETSW, we wish to work closely with the council in developing a balanced package of improvement not only to improve qualifying training, but also to improve the skills of staff already working in the field.

The training support programme announced by the Government last November is an important step already taken in relation to those working in the care of elderly people. The Health and Medicines Bill includes powers which would enable us to make similar provision in the field of child care. We are making up to £1 million available to CCETSW to improve planning and co-operation between the colleges and employers and review the standards of teaching of various aspects of social work. We are also providing support for a variety of other initiatives aimed at extending the availability of training for social services staff in a number of specialist areas such as mental health and mental handicap and child abuse.

In developing qualifying training, our view is that the most important immediate objectives are to improve the quality and availability of "practice placements" and to move to a uniform two-year training period for postgraduates. We attach high priority to both of these. We are seeking the help of the council to develop detailed proposals for phased development over a five-year period starting in 1989-90.

These further measures, building on improvements already taking place, should help to ensure a better prepared and therefore more competent staff for the personal social services. The full text of my letter is as follows:

"CARE FOR TOMORROW: THE CCETSW TRAINING REFORM PROPOSALS

I am grateful to you, Tony Hall and Rachel Pierce for coming to see me on 20 April. We agreed that it would be helpful if I were to let you have a statement of the Government's position before your Council session on 4 May.

I was able to assure you that the Government agrees that there is a need for improvement in training for the social services. The employers of social services staff have an important role to play in this, as does CCETSW. For social work staff this is necessary both at the qualifying and post-qualifying stages, and more training opportunities are vital for the other staff employed in the social services. We have already introduced a training support programme for staff working with elderly people with that in mind.

We welcome the considerable effort the Council has already put into specifying what needs to be attained by student social workers at the point of qualification; improving planning and co-operation between the colleges and the employers and reviewing the standards of teaching of the various aspects of social work. These are all essential elements in getting the most from the existing public investment in the preparation of social workers. We very much want to encourage and support this work, and the developments that flow from it. We also welcome the contribution being made by CCETSW to the development of the National Vocational Qualification framework. I told you that the Government's financial allocation to CCETSW for this financial year is being increased by up to £1 million to enable the programme of improvements to increase in scale. I asked you to let officials have an action plan for this programme of improvements for their agreement.

We had, in our earlier correspondence, asked CCETSW to provide a set of costed options to enable Ministers to form a view of their relative benefits. In the event the Council provided a single package of measures in its Care for Tomorrow proposals. We discussed those, and I made it clear that the Government did not feel able to make financial provision for the proposals it contains for the extension to three years of qualifying training for social workers. I explained that this conclusion was based principally on our assessment of the relative priority of this development for future generations of social workers among the many other competing calls on public resources in the short to medium term, both in the social services and in other fields, including not least those needed to improve the skills of existing social care staff in such fields as residential care of the elderly and child care.

You made it clear that three years training was essential in the view of the Council in order adequately to prepare social workers for the tasks they face, and that its achievement would remain your long-term goal.

Against this background, I am concerned to respond to your request for a firm steer on where and how to concentrate planning effort in getting a practical programme of improvement in social work training under way. Our view, which I think you share, is that the two most important objectives in the short-term are to improve the quality and availability of "practice placements" and to move to a uniform two-year training period for postgraduates, both of which have the advantage of building on developments already taking place.

I acknowledge that both require a measure of direct government encouragement or sponsorship, especially in advance of employment-led NVQ arrangements becoming a reality. You understand that I cannot commit myself to specific sums in advance of public expenditure discussions, which will not be completed until the autumn; but I can tell you that I attach very high priority indeed to finding the resources to make significant progress in these two respects, with a start being made from 1989-90. I hope therefore that the Council will bring forward proposals quickly for a phased programme to secure these improvements over a five-year period.

I recognise that you and your Council would have wished us simply to accept the programme set out in "Care for Tomorrow". But I hope that you and they will recognise in turn that the important steps we are suggesting are consistent with the Council's long-term goal, and indeed can be seen as substantial progress towards it. I hope too that the arrangements that we have set in train for an annual programme and performance review will provide a good framework for us to work together in building further on this progress in due course.

Accident and Emergency Service (Sheffield)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that the Sheffield district health authority retains a full accident and emergency service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 May 1988]: Management of local health services is the responsibility of the district health authority concerned. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Sheffield health authority for the information he seeks. However I understand that there has been a rota for accident and emergency services in Sheffield since 1976 and the current rota has been in operation since 1981. Although it has been reviewed from time to time, it is still regarded locally as the most efficient way of serving the city's needs.

Kidney Donor Cards

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons who were kidney donors in the past year were carrying, or in possession of, kidney donor cards.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 May 1988]: This information is not available centrally. The total number of organ transplant operations carried out in 1987 (as notified to the United Kingdom transplant service) was 1,972, which was again a record. The total number of cards issued in 1987 was approx 5·5 million. The value of the organ donor card cannot be assessed solely by the extent to which it is found on donors. It has proved a useful publicity tool in making the general public aware of the need for organ donation. It also encourages those who would be willing to be donors to discuss their wishes with their relatives so that, even if a card is not found, they will be receptive to, or perhaps initiate, a suggestion that organs should be donated. We are currently emphasising this aspect of the card in our publicity.

Some 3 million cards have been issued in the first four months of 1988 and transplants appear to be approximately 57 per cent. higher than in the same period last year.

Benefits and Grants

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the figures for expenditure on supplementary benefits, urgent needs provision, maternity grants, death grants and all other benefits which now come under the social fund, for each year since 1974.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1988, c. 33-34]: I regret that some of the information relating to maternity grants and death grants was wrong. The table sets out the correct data.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation spent last year on consultants; what percentage that sum was of total expenditure; how many consultancies were awarded; and how many of those involved competition.

Mr. Trippier: In 1987-88 LDDC made 225 consultancy appointments to 145 consultants at a value of £6·2 million plus associated costs. Total payments amounting to £12·1 million were made to 199 consultants in respect of appointments let in 1987-88 and previous years, which was about 10 per cent. of LDDC's expenditure. The LDDC is satisfied that the requirements for competition were met. The external audit for 1987-88 will provide an idependent scrutiny.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the London Docklands development corporation is doing to finance the building of new schools in docklands.

Mr. Trippier: The statutory responsibility for providing new schools rests with the local education authorities. The LDDC is continuing to consider with those authorities and other interested bodies what assistance it can provide to raise educational standards in docklands.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of the London Docklands development corporation for the disposal of its assets and responsibilities when it is wound up; and what directions he has given on these matters.

Mr. Trippier: The corporation will be guided by the Secretary of State in these matters. No directions have been given.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been adopted by the London Docklands development corporation to ensure that there is no conflict of interest between the corporation and developers where members of the corporation's staff leave, or are intending to leave, to take up a post in the private sector with development companies.

Mr. Trippier: The corporation's code of conduct for its staff sets out requirements for the declaration of interests.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made by the London Docklands development corporation to safeguard the use of (a) the Millwall outer dock and (b) the Royal Victoria dock for water sports; what arrangements exist to assess possible conflict between developments and water sport uses; what is the development corporation's policy on current development proposals at these docks which adversely affect water sports users; how much the development corporation has invested in water sports facilities at these two locations; and what has been invested by (i) other public bodies and (ii) private companies.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for the disposal of land on the south side of the King George V docks by the London Docklands development corporation; at what price it has been sold or leased; and what restrictions have been placed on its future use.

Mr. Trippier: Some 22 acres of LDDC land in the area have been leased to London City airport. Part has been disposed of for mixed development and part for airport related uses, subject to planning permission and LDDC's detailed approval as landlord. The price paid for individual sites is commercially confidential information.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what area of water currently in the enclosed docks will be required for the Canary wharf scheme; what arrangements have been made for its disposal or leasing to the developers of Canary wharf by the London Docklands development corporation; and what price has been fixed.

Mr. Trippier: A small part of the West India dock water has been sold to the developers. The price is contained within the agreement outlined in my answer of 23 July 1987, at column 377.

Pensions (Underpayment)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce legislation to ensure that local authority retired employees will receive compensation for the underpayment of their pensions from April 1987.

Mr. Chope: Pursuant to the statement made on 18 December 1987 by the Paymaster General (Official Report, columns 845-46), my right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce such legislation. But in the light of the statement he has invited the local government employers to consider what action might be taken in respect of the local government superannuation scheme.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations took place between his Department and the Water Authorities Association prior to their commissioning of a survey from Hill and Knowlton on the interests of environmental bodies in water privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Rating Reform

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will answer the letter from the Prison Reform Trust dated 10 March regarding the eligibility of remand prisoners for the community charge.

Mr. Howard: A reply was sent to the Prison Reform Trust on 29 April. In accordance with the undertaking I gave at the Report stage of the Local Government Finance Bill. We are considering the possibility of exempting remand prisoners from the community charge.

Inner Cities

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response was received to the consultation document on the Government's proposal to introduce the new city grant for inner city projects.

Mr. Trippier: The responses to the consultation document which was issued by the Department on city grant on 7 March to local authorities, businesses and other interested persons and organisations was extremely encouraging. The proposal to simplify the grants system and speed up the handling of cases were warmly welcomed by the great majority of respondents.

A short summary of the written responses received has been placed today in the Libraries of the Houses of Parliament and, where respondents have explicitly authorised the Department to do so, copies of their responses have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

City grant will now operate in broadly the way proposed in the consultation document with a threshold of £200,000 project value. Copies of the guidance notes have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Palace of Westminster (Toilets)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 20 April, if he will take steps to ensure that those toilets in the Palace of Westminster which are marked as reserved for the exclusive use of hon. Members of Parliament also designate the gender for which they are reserved.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 April 1988]: I will draw this to the attention of the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

London Boroughs (Properties)

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on (a) how many commercial and industrial buildings and sites are owned by each London borough, (b) how many of them are let, (c) how much rent they produce, (d) how many of them are empty and (e) whether the borough owns them freehold or leasehold.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available to my Department.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 26 April regarding local authority gipsy sites in areas of outstanding natural beauty, if he will indicate for which of these sites he had considered what action to take under section 8 of the Caravan Sites Act.

Mrs. Roe: The sites at Redland depot, Robertsbridge and Chiseldon camp, Swindon were subject to directions under section 8 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Rates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each English authority (a) their rate or precept for 1987-88 and 1988-89 expressed as pence in the pound, (b) the percentage change between the two above years, (c) the average rate or precept for 1987-88 and 1988-89 expressed as an average charge per domestic hereditament, (d) the average of (a) and (c) above and the percentage change between the two by class of authority and (e) the average of (a) and (c) above and the percentage change between the two by political control of authority.

Mr. Chope: The local rate for a district or borough is made up from the rate charged by the district itself together with the average of parish precepts and special district expenses and precepts charged by certain other specialised bodies such as waste disposal authorities. It does not include the precepts charged by higher tier authorities, for example, county councils in the shires, police, fire and civil defence and transport authorities in metropolitan areas and London, and the Inner London education authority.

The table sets out the available information:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in descending order for each English authority on the basis of the percentage change in their rate or precept from 1987-88 and 1988-89, showing in each case the political control of the authority at the time of setting the later rate or precept.

Mr. Chope: The local rate for a district or borough is made up from the rate charged by the district itself together with the average of parish precepts and special district expenses and precepts charged by certain other specialised bodies such as waste disposal authorities. It does not include the precepts charged by higher tier authorities, for example county councils in the shires, police, fire and civil defence and transport authorities in metropolitan areas and London, and the Inner London Education Authority.

The table sets out the available information for each English authority:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Channel Islands

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the right of the individual petition has yet been ratified in accordance with article 63 of the convention with regard to the first protocol of the European convention on human rights for (a) the Bailiwick of Guernsey, (b) the Bailiwick of Jersey and (c) the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The right of individual petition in accordance with article 25 of the European convention on human rights was renewed by Guernsey and Jersey for a period of five years with effect from January 1986. The first protocol to the convention was extended to Guernsey and Jersey in February 1988.

The Isle of Man Government decided, in 1976, not to renew the right of individual petition and reaffirmed this decision on subsequent occasions. They are currently considering whether to have the first protocol to the convention extended to the island.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and the authorities in (a) Jersey and (b) Guernsey, concerning procedures relating to presentation of petitions from these islands and certain orders of the Privy Council of 1679; and if he will seek assurances that the procedure with regard to the registration of Acts of Parliament orders or letters of the Privy Council in those islands will not be changed without prior approval of Parliament.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Informal discussions on clarifying the procedures for appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have taken place with the Attorneys-General of Jersey and Guernsey. Any changes relating to the registration of Acts of Parliament, Orders or letters of the Privy Council would be matters requiring the approval of Her Majesty The Queen in Council.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the judges rules remain applicable in (a) the Channel Islands and (b) the Isle of Man where the Police and Criminal Evidence Act does not apply; whether the judges of the courts in those islands are empowered to alter or amend the judges rules; and what proposals there are to extend the Police and Criminal Evidence Act to those islands.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The judges rules, which have been replaced by the code of practice issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, do not apply in the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man and the courts in those islands have no power to amend or alter these rules. Principles similar to those laid down in the code of practice have been adopted in the islands. There is no provision whereby the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 could be extended to the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to whether legislation has yet been introduced in (a) the Channel Islands and (b) the Isle of Man to prevent discrimination on the basis of racial or ethnic origin or sex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. But I have no doubt that the island authorities will be prepared to consider such legislation if circumstances required it.

Gillow v. United Kingdom

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the financial costs incurred by the United Kingdom Government in the case of Gillow v. United Kingdom before the European Commission and Court of Human Rights; what part of those costs shall be borne by the island of Guernsey; and what measures have been taken by Her Majesty's Government as high contraction party to the convention for the island of Guernsey, to secure the rights and freedoms protected by the convention in that island in relation to the future application of the Housing Control of Occupation (Guernsey) Laws.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The sum of £12,869, agreed as compensation and costs to the plaintiff, has been paid by the Bailiwick of Guernsey. The Bailiwick will also be asked to reimburse the United Kingdom for costs to cover the employment of counsel at Strasbourg when these have been determined. Her Majesty's Government are satisfied that Guernsey will take full cognisance of its obligations under the convention in the application of the Housing Control of Occupation (Guernsey) laws.

British Telecom (Telephone Logs)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with British Telecom to ensure that logs of telephone calls are in a form that can easily be used, if necessary, by the police and security services; whether he is satisfied with the established procedures for allowing access to such logs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I am not aware of problems arising in this area.

PRIME MINISTER

Kilmarnock

Q90. Mr McKelvey: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit Kilmarnock.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Ramsbottom

Q107. Mr. Burt: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Ramsbottom.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Prime Minister of Iceland

Q129. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the Prime Minister of Iceland.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to meet the Prime Minister of Iceland in the near future.

Cyprus

Q132. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had during her recent meeting with the President of Cyprus as to the future of British bases in Cyprus; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not my normal practice to give details of such discussions. President Vassiliou and I dealt with a number of matters of interest to both countries.

Engagements

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Hungary.

SCOTLAND

Free School Meals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of children in each local education authority who received free school meals (a) because their parents were on family income supplement and (b) at the discretion of the local education authority at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Nurses

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time nurses work in the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information, which is provisional and relates to 30 September 1987, is as follows:

Nursing staff in the NHS in Scotland

	Whole-time	Part-time
Qualified	26,756	14,183
In training	10,805	40
Unqualified	8,743	13,170
Total	46,304	27,393

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, further to his written answer on 28 January, Official Report, column 325, he will clarify the circumstances in which health boards could be designated responsible persons for the purposes of the community charge; about whom the information will be requested; and what kinds of information health boards would be required to provide.

Mr. Lang: Under section 17(6) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 the responsible person who is required to supply information in respect of premises for community charge registration purposes is defined as the owner-occupier or tenant-occupier of the premises or, where there is no such person, the owner or any tenant who has a lease of 12 months or more. The Act also provides that any other person may be designated as a responsible person by the community charges registration officer. In the case, for example, of nurses' homes, it is therefore possible that health boards, or one of their officers, would be, or would be designated as, responsible persons. The responsible person is required to provide the information about persons solely or mainly resident on the premises requested in the inquiry form or the supplementary inquiry form prescribed in schedules 3 and 4 of the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether any official publicity material in relation to the community charge, that either has been given to members of the public on request, or has appeared in the Scottish newspapers, informs future community charge payers that their name and address may be sold without their consent or knowledge;

(2) whether any official publicity material in relation to the community charge, that either has been given to members of the public on request, or has appeared in the Scottish newspapers, informs future community charge payers that their name and address on the register may be inspected by police, Inland Revenue, the Department of Health and Social Security and other organisations without their consent or knowledge.

Mr. Lang: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will ensure that any future official publicity material in relation to the community charge will inform future community charge payers that their name and address may be sold without their consent or knowledge, and that their name and address on the register may be inspected by police, Inland Revenue, the Department of Health and Social Security and other organisations without their consent or knowledge.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether any restriction should be put on the availability for sale of the publicly available parts of the community charges register. It is made clear in the notice to be sent to registered persons informing them of their entry in the community charges register (schedule 1 to the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988) that the parts of the register showing names, addresses and collective community charge mulipliers applying to certain premises will be made publicly available. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider in due course whether any further publicity should be given to these points.

Laboratories

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the laboratories now operating in Scotland with their respective specialities and the number of (a) specialised, (b) auxiliary and (c) ancillary staff, at each establishment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In respect of the National Health Service information is not held centrally in precisely the form requested. The available information, including manpower, is contained in "Laboratory Statistics" published by Information and Statistics Division, Scottish Health Service Common Services Agency. The information relates to individual laboratories at each establishment, in the following groups: clinical chemistry, haematology, microbiology and pathology. Copies of the latest edition, for the year ending 31 March 1985, are held in the Library.

Retail Developments

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many retail developments are currently the subject of planning appeals before him; and what is (a) their total square footage, (b) the number with a square footage at or above 100,000 sq ft and (c) the total square footage of the appeals in (b).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is estimated that there are over 60 current appeals with a retail element of which about half are likely to have a floor area in excess of 100,000 sq ft.

Student Fees

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will announce the fees to be charged to students attending Scottish institutions other than universities in the academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For the academic year 1988-89 my right hon. and learned Friend has prescribed the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community (EC) countries on full-time advanced courses in the central institutions and colleges of education (fees for 1987-88 are shown in brackets):

Postgraduate courses	1,800 (1,730)
Undergraduate and equivalent courses	578 (556)

For non-advanced courses, the central institutions and colleges of education will be invited to set their own fees, by having regard to fees charged for comparable courses at local authority further education colleges.

Fees for home and other EC students on courses at local authority colleges are the responsibility of the local authorities. I understand that the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has decided to recommend fees for such students as follows:

Postgraduate courses	1,800 (1,760)
Advanced full-time courses	578 (556)
Non-advanced full-time courses	440 (360)

For overseas students the Government's policy is that students should pay fees that cover the cost of their education. Local authorities and institutions are free to determine the fees to be charged in accordance with that policy, and in the light of their own circumstances. I understand that COSLA has decided to recommend to local authorities the following fees for students at local authority colleges paying the overseas rate who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980:

Advanced courses	3,890 (3,720)
Non-advanced courses	2,145 (2,055)

Bathing Waters

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the results for the 1987 season of monitoring the Scottish bathing waters identified under the European Community's bathing waters directive; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The monitoring results for 1987 are set out in summary form in the table. Nineteen out of 23 waters monitored met the directive's standards. My Department expects to publish shortly a full report on the quality of the bathing waters during the 1986 and 1987 seasons, and I shall make a further statement at that time.

EMPLOYMENT

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost per trainee at an information technology education centre; and how long does the course last.

Mr. Nicholls: Information technology centres provide a range of training, most of it under YTS. In 1987-88 the annual cost to the Manpower Services Commission per YTS trainee was £4,224. As with all YTS schemes, information technology centres provide up to two years of vocational training for unemployed 16-year-olds and up to one year of training for unemployed 17-year-olds.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many filled places were there on the new job training scheme on 31 March.

Mr. Nicholls: At 25 March 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, 30,435 formerly unemployed people were participating in the new job training scheme.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the aggregate disposable income in 1979, showing the median, the lowest and highest deciles, and the lower and upper quartiles, for (a) all households in the United Kingdom and (b) Greater London, in an adjusted form on the current basis, as if the housing benefit scheme had applied at that date, as provided for 1983 in the answer in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, columns 211-12.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to produce estimates from the 1979 family expenditure survey on the same basis as those provided for 1983 in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, columns 211-12.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings have been purchased by each of the local housing authorities in Wales from the private housing sector in each of the past five years.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table:

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide additional finance for Alyn and Deeside district council for housing repairs, maintenance and rehabilitation schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Alyn and Deeside district council receives an appropriate share of the capital allocation which we make to housing authorities, and resources are also made available towards the activities of the housing associations in the area. The authority has not bid against additional resources the Department has available for enveloping and block repair schemes.

Free School Meals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of children in each local education authority who received free school meals (a) because their parents were in receipt of family income supplement and (b) at the discretion of the local education authority, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In September 1987 an estimated 82,236 children received school meals because their parents were in receipt of supplementary benefit or family income support. But information about the numbers in each category is not available. A further 7,314 children received free school meals at the discretion of the local education authority.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent qualified nurses working in Wales in (a) hospital maternity units and (b) special care baby units;

(2) if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent qualified midwives working in Wales (a) in hospital maternity units, (b) in special care baby units, (c) in education and (d) as community midwives.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Information taken primarily from the NHS payroll is not sufficiently detailed to distinguish reliably between the occupational categories of nurses and midwives requested.

Tropical Woods

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice his Department is giving to local authorities and other institutional users of tropical woods in Wales about the use of wood from unsustainable sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 3 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry on 21 April, at column 534.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Attorney-General if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 26 April, Official Report, column 64 he will set out the criteria the Crown Prosecution Service uses in judging whether time occupied by earlier court proceedings has occasioned staleness of a significance sufficient for criminal proceedings not to be instituted.

The Attorney-General: Each case will be viewed in the light of its particular circumstances and of the considerations set out in paragraph 8, in particular, of the code for Crown prosecutors to which my previous answer referred.

The code for Crown prosecutors may be found in the annual report made by the Director of Public Prosecutions to the Attorney-General. Copies of the director's first report were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 13 August 1987. This was announced on 21 October 1987, at column 743.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present pupil-teacher ratio for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1987 the pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in England were 21·9 and 15·6, respectively. Information for schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Polytechnics

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those colleges which have given a definite indication of their intention to apply to join the Polytechnics Central Funding Council sector by 30 April and whose full-time equivalent enrolment numbers for courses of advanced further education on 1 November 1985 did not exceed 55 per cent. of their total full-time equivalent enrolment numbers on that date.

Mr. Jackson: The following colleges have given a provisional indication of their wish that the Secretary of State should exercise the power conferred by clause 106(1) of the Education Reform Bill to incorporate them within the PCFC sector with effect from 1 April 1989, subject to the Bill's obtaining the Royal Assent:

Buckinghamshire College of Higher Education
Cambridgeshire College of Arts and Technology
Gloucestershire College of Arts and Technology
Harrow College of Higher Education
Luton College of Higher Education

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will issue guidance on the way in which the governing bodies of further education colleges should be reformed so as to meet the requirements of clauses 132 and 133 of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am today issuing draft guidance which sets out how I would expect college governing bodies to be reformed and their instruments of government revised in order to meet the requirements of clauses 132 and 133 of the Education Reform Bill if it receives Royal Assent in its present form. The draft guidance is being issued now in order to inform discussion of the further education clauses during the remaining stages of the Bill's passage through Parliament, to help local education authorities, colleges and others to prepare for the reconstitution of governing bodies as envisaged by the Bill, and to give all concerned an early opportunity to comment. Draft guidance on the provisions I would expect to see contained in the planning and delegation schemes envisaged by clause 121 of the Bill was issued on 21 April.

Copies of the draft guidance have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and in the Vote Office. They are also being sent to local education authorities, further and higher education colleges, and a range of interested bodies, with a request for any comments by 22 July 1988.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Development Grant

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications were awaiting determination on 1 April for (a) regional development grant and (b) RSFA in the Corby development area.

Mr. Atkins: The number of applications awaiting determination on 1 April 1988 for the Corby development area was:

	Number
(a) Regional Development Grant	245
(b) RSA	9

Consumer Protection

Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received seeking new legislation to protect consumers; and how he intends to respond.

Mr. Butcher: Suggestions for new legislation to protect consumers are received from a wide group of organisations and individuals. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 February to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling), which set out information on plans for new legislation for the protection of consumers.

Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to extend the provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill [Lords] to (a) the Channel Islands and (b) the Isle of Man: and what other measures are being taken to ensure that the intended purposes of this legislation are not avoided by persons or businesses in the United Kingdom, based in those island territories.

Mr. Butcher: Part I of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill contains provision under which it may be extended to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man by Order in Council. In accordance with normal practice it will be for the islands themselves to decide if and to what extent it should be so extended. The Isle of Man is understood to be considering introducing new legislation of its own on copyright, in parallel with the United Kingdom Bill, and in this event extension of the provisions of the Bill is unlikely to be appropriate.

Financial Services Act 1987

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions have taken place with the authorities of (a) the Channel Islands, and (b) the Isle of Man regarding the implementation of the Financial Services Act in those territories; and if he will make a statement on the nature of these discussions in respect of (i) investment businesses and (ii) other businesses.

Mr. Maude: Guernsey and the Isle of Man have been designated under section 130 of the Financial Services Act as having a law in relation to insurance companies which affords adequate protection to policyholders and potential policyholders. My Department has also had discussions with the authorities of Guernsey, Jersey and the Isle of Man regarding the possible designation of those territories under section 87 of the Financial Services Act in relation to collective investment schemes.

Businesses (Houghton and Washington)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what figures are available for the growth in the number of businesses in Houghton and Washington.

Mr. Atkins: Comprehensive information on the lines requested is not available. However, data collected on the setting up of new manufacturing firms employing more than 10 people show that 20 such firms have opened since January 1985 currently employing more than 1,600 people. The full employment implications of these openings, particularly the inward investment cases, have yet to fully work through. For example, excluded from this data is the forecast of an additional 2,400 jobs at Nissan to bring the total employment to 3,500 by 1992.

Manufacturing Investment (North-East)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the figures for manufacturing investment in the north-east for each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is shown in the following table:

Net capital expenditure[1] in manufacturing industry in the North-East[2] at 1980 prices

Year	Net capital expenditure £ million
1979	600
1980	396
1981	254

Technology Industries (North-East)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to encourage the growth of new technology industries in the north-east of England.

Mr. Atkins: Industry in the north-east will be greatly encouraged by the enterprise initiative, with major new initiatives covering design, marketing, quality, manufacturing technology, business planning, business information systems, exports, research and technology and business education backed up by investment and innovation grants for small firms, and regional selective assistance where clearly necessary to bring about good projects.

New and existing high technology firms and industries will also be encouraged by the work of other organisations in the region receiving support from DTI and from other Government Departments, including the Northern Development Company, English Estates North and the urban development corporations. Taken together with the priority given to new technology by the city action team and the task forces, and the work of others in the region involved in technology transfer and industry/education, this represents a strongly supportive environment and infrastructure for high technology industry to succeed in the north-east.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the increase for domestic product per capita in each of the regions of the United Kingdom since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Estimates of gross domestic product per capita in each of the regions of the United Kingdom were published in the November 1987 edition of Economic Trends, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Increases in gross domestic product per capita between 1979 and 1986 are provided for the specified regions in the table:

Steel and Aluminium Forgings Industry

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the output of the steel and aluminium forgings industry in (a) 1987 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Atkins: The figures are as follows. Separate figures are not available for aluminium forgings.

Deliveries of forgings

Opportunity Japan Campaign

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's Opportunity Japan campaign.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Opportunity Japan campaign is being mounted by senior British business men with the support of the Department of Trade and Industry and the British Overseas Trade Board. It will aim to heighten United Kingdom companies' awareness of the increasing opportunities offered by the strategically important Japanese market and will stress the arguments for tackling it now with the appropriate long-term commitment.

This message will be elaborated by His Royal Highness The Duke of Kent, vice chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board, Cabinet Ministers and business men experienced in Japan at briefing meetings for targeted company chief executives. These will be held in June and July at venues throughout the country.

Scottish and Newcastle Brewery plc

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Scottish and Newcastle company has filed accounts and an annual return for the last financial year with Companies House.

Mr. Maude: Scottish and Newcastle Brewery plc filed accounts made up to 3 May 1987 with Companies House, Edinburgh, on 8 September 1987 and an annual return made up to 10 September 1987 on 22 October 1987.

These documents are available for inspection.

DEFENCE

Heanor Hospital, Derbyshire

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any representations regarding the status of Heanor hospital, Derbyshire, as a war memorial.

Mr. Freeman: I have recently received a letter from my hon. Friend about this and I will write to him shortly. No other representations have been received to date.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military assistance has been given to Israel by the United Kingdom since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Military assistance for Israel has been limited since the imposition of arms sales restrictions in 1982. Israel continues to pay for some places on United Kingdom training courses. All requests for training and exchanges of information are considered on a case-by-case basis.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his negotiations with the Gibraltar coroner on how three SAS men will give their evidence into the deaths of three IRA terrorists without revealing their identities at the inquest.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No discussions about arrangements for military personnel to give evidence to the inquest have yet taken place.

Chemical Warfare Establishments

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet made arrangements for the exchange of visits between the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down and the Soviet chemical warfare facility at Shikhany.

Mr. Ian Stewart: An exchange of visits between the Chemical Defence Establishment (CDE) at Porton Down and the Soviet chemical warfare facility at Shikhany was originally suggested by the United Kingdom in 1986. At that time the Soviet Union had not yet acknowledged that it possessed chemical warfare (CW) stocks, but it did so in early 1987. It accepted the idea of an exchange of visits in principle towards the end of last year.

Arrangements have now been made for the Soviet Union to send an official team to visit Porton Down from 24 to 26 May, as the first part of the exchange of visits. In return, a United Kingdom team will visit Shikhany in July for an equivalent period. These visits are designed to improve confidence and understanding between Britain and the USSR in the context of the continuing negotiations of the conference on disarmament in Geneva for a comprehensive and global ban on chemical weapons, which is one of NATO's arms control priorities. They will involve the exchange of scientific, technical and military information on CW-related matters.

Since the United Kingdom abandoned its chemical weapons capability in the 1950s, the role of the CDE is research into protective measures for United Kingdom armed forces for defensive purposes. The Soviet CW complex at Shikhany, on the other hand, is part of their substantial capability for the research, development and production of chemical weapons.

The programme at Porton Down will be designed to maximise the opportunities for the exchange of information and for building confidence between the two sides. In addition to the visit to CDE, it will include a tour of the other facilities and organisations at Porton Down, including the United Kingdom defence nuclear biological and chemical centre and the DHSS public health laboratory service centre for applied micro-biological research. At CDE the facilities to be visited will include research and trials units, and the recently constructed facility for the destruction of old CW agents. It is intended that the full range of CW-related issues should be discussed during the visit, including production, assessment of the CW hazard, storage, trials, detection, protection, monitoring, decontamination, medical countermeasures and disposal.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his departmental budget includes any sums earmarked for HIV testing of pregnant mothers.

Mr. Newton: No. However, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his announcement on 3 November 1987 about future spending plans for health and personal social services, the additional money for AIDS over £50 million was intended, among other things, to help develop preventive, counselling and diagnostic services. A copy of the announcement has been placed in the Library.

Staffing (Trent Region)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the staffing levels in each health authority within the Trent region for the last five years in the categories (a) ancillary posts, (b) nursing, (c) medical dental, (d) administration and clerical, and (e) other grades, including ambulance staff and technicians.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is shown in the tables.

NHS Property

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the total cost of the work requiring to be carried out on National Health Service properties identified by the National Audit Office report of 28 March, HC 405.

Mrs. Currie: The notional cost of bringing all National Health Service properties in England up to an adequate condition is estimated to be of the order of £1·8 billion. It would be wasteful to devote resources to bring every property to an adequate condition, since some are empty and awaiting disposal and some are planned for replacement. In England the NHS target is to have 70 per cent. of properties in an adequate condition and at present 68 per cent. are considered to be so.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the changes to social security benefits which were announced on 27 April.

Mr. Scott: The measures announced last week included changes to the rules of the housing benefit, income support and family credit schemes and arrangements to provide transitional protection to those claimants in vulnerable groups who have lost significant sums at the point of change to the new schemes.

First, we propose to increase the limit on the amount of capital which renders a claimant ineligible for receipt of housing benefit to £8,000. Subject to the necessary consultation with local authorities and others, this change will be made as soon as possible to take effect from the date when the regulations become effective.

Secondly, some minor changes are being made to the detailed rules of income support and, where applicable, housing benefit and family credit. In particular, we are amending the procedures for taking account of the value of a home no longer occupied by a claimant: for example, because the claimant has been admitted to long-term residential care or has left the marital home because the marriage has broken down. There will now be a period of 26 weeks to allow for the disposal of the property, with provision for extension in exceptional cases of genuine difficulty. Other detailed changes, including those to provide transitional protection to people affected by the changes in rules relating to full-time work, are described in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Mr. Haselhurst) on 28 April, at columns 253-54.

The third main change is the introduction of a measure of transitional protection for pensioners, including those in receipt of a widow's pension, long-term sick and disabled people (including those in receipt of industrial injuries benefit), lone parents and families with children who have lost significant sums in housing benefit as a result of the changes introduced on 1 April. The scheme will include those in the relevant groups with capital between £6,000 and £8,000 who will have lost all entitlement to housing benefit between 1 April and the operative date of the change to the capital rule.

The precise way in which assessments will be carried out will be decided in the light of detailed discussions with the representatives of local authorities about the information that can readily be provided. The main basis for payments will be a comparison between the cash sum received by claimants as housing benefit and housing benefit supplement immediately before 1 April and their present cash amount of housing benefit. For those affected by the change to the capital rules the comparison will be with the cash entitlement after the new limit of £8,000 is applied. The comparison will be adjusted to take account of the minimum contribution claimants are required to make to domestic rates which will not be eligible for any protection beyond that already included in the personal allowances. Transitional payments will be designed to ensure that the resulting cash difference does not exceed £2·50 a week. Payments of family income supplement and family credit will be taken into account in making the comparison, with an allowance for the loss of entitlement to free school meals.

These transitional payments will be made from a new departmental central unit to be located in Glasgow.

Payments will be made monthly, or less frequently for small amounts, continuing unless there is a significant change in the claimant's circumstances. They will not be uprated and, as is usual with transitional arrangements, will be phased out as increases in benefits and other changes reduce the necessity for them. The period of phasing will vary from case to case, but for the larger losses protection may be necessary for some time. The new unit will not be fully operational for some weeks, but detailed procedures for claiming these payments will be announced as soon as possible and payments will be backdated to 1 April.

We estimate that the full benefit cost of these measures will be some £100 million in the current financial year. Parliamentary approval for the payments will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate; pending that approval, urgent expenditure of up to £25 million will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund. The provision for administrative costs of local authorities in paying housing benefit will also be adjusted as necessary to reflect additional work arising from these changes.

Family Credit

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the introduction of family credit.

Mr. Scott: The introduction of family credit has been widely welcomed.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the administrative arrangements to be used to implement the amendments to the housing benefit regulations announced by him on 27 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 May, at column 424.

South Manchester Community Health Council

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be responding to the correspondence sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on matters raised by the South Manchester community health council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I replied to the right hon. Member on 28 April.

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the implications of the Griffiths report on care in the community.

Mr. Newton: We have received a number of comments on Sir Roy Griffiths' report and will take account of them in framing our own proposals.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, after the introduction of the proposed community charge, claimants will be informed when their names and addresses are passed to the community charge registration officer of the local authority area in which they live.

Mr. Scott: Yes. Detailed arrangements are still being developed in consultation with the local authority associations, but the intention is that the letters and forms that are to be given to income support claimants will make clear the circumstances in which a claimant's name and address are passed to the community charge registration officer.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the guidelines to his local offices for deciding eligibility to benefits for those claimants whose previously owned capital sum is held in trust; and if he will indicate specifically whether such guidelines take account of any legal variations pertaining to the laws of trust between Scotland and England.

Mr. Portillo: The Chief Adjudication Officer is responsible for providing guidance to local adjudication officers who decide claims for income support. Guidance on the treatment of capital held in trust is contained in volume 3, paragraphs 30401 to 30464, of the Adjudication Officers' Guide, a copy of which is in the Library. Paragraphs 30421 to 30428 of the AOG contain advice about the different rules of intestacy in Scotland and England.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list each Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitor published since 1 January 1987, giving the title, date and numbers of copies distributed to date; how many have been distributed free of charge to (a) Government, National Health Service and other users and (b) press; and how many have been sold so far and at what price.

Mrs. Currie: Up to 31 December 1987, OPCS monitors were available free of charge. Following a review of published statistical data, with effect from 1 January 1988, some of the monitors were discontinued and a charging system for the continued monitors was introduced. A copy of the new arrangements has been placed in the Library.

The information requested is as follows. The sales figures are the numbers sold between 1 January and 29 April 1988.

ENERGY

Petroleum Licences

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) on what basis since 1979 his Department has granted licences to search and bore for petroleum under section 2 of the 1934 Act;

(2) what method has been used to allocate individual petroleum licences since June 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: Since 1979 licences have mainly been issued on a discretionary basis, in which the applicant's financial and technical competence and his ability to meet other aims of Government policy, notably his readiness to pursue a comprehensive exploration of the licensed area, have been the major factors in deciding whether or not to grant a licence. A small number of offshore production licences have been awarded by a sealed-bid cash tender system.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, before granting licences to search and bore for petroleum, his Department informs the freehold owners of land affected of the intention to issue such licences.

Mr. Parkinson: Freehold owners of land affected are not informed of the intention to grant licences, because the award of a petroleum licence by itself does not confer on the licence holder any rights over the freeholder's land.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how his Department notifies freehold owners of land to be affected that it is the intention to grant licences under the Petroleum (Production) Regulations 1976 (S.I. 1976 No. 1129).

Mr. Parkinson: The 1976 regulations referred to by my hon. Friend have now been superseded by other regulations and licences are no longer awarded under them.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what rights are conferred on an operator granted a petroleum production licence in relation to land the operator does not own.

Mr. Parkinson: The grant of a petroleum licence confers on the licensee the rights to search for and get petroleum in the licensed area, depending on the precise type of licence he holds, irrespective of the ownership of the land in question. However, it does not by itself confer any other rights, and so he would have to obtain permission to enter the land before he could exercise his rights under the petroleum licence.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many petroleum licences have been issued by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: The figures for all types of licences issued, both offshore and onshore, are as follows:

Year	Number of licences issued
1979	44
1980	138
1981	61
1982	61
1983	127
1984	26
1985	128
1986	94
1987	68
[1]1988	67

[1] To date.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the criteria laid down for determining the price to be paid for petroleum licences.

Mr. Parkinson: Licences are awarded in return for initial application fees and subsequent periodic rental payments. Application fees are set to cover the administrative costs of dealing with the application. The rental payments on various types of licences are designed to be sufficiently low in the early years of the licence to encourage exploration. In the longer-term licences, once the exploration phase has been completed the general principle is to increase the rental year by year in order to encourage the licensee to surrender any areas not required for petroleum development.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy in what circumstances it is possible to vary the terms of a petroleum licence.

Mr. Parkinson: The petroleum licence is a contractual document and it is not possible to vary any of its terms except by agreement between the parties.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many petroleum licences have been granted, withdrawn or given up, amended or varied, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the figures given to him today for the issue of petroleum licences. The figures for surrendered licences of all types are as follows:

Year	Number of licences surrendered
1979	6
1980	7
1981	9
1982	25
1983	31
1984	21
1985	27
1986	27
1987	65
[1]1988	7

[1] To date.

Notes:

1. Figures do not include licences expiring at the end of the term.
2. Some of the surrendered licences were replaced with different types of licences.

Each licence contains an agree work obligation which is commercially confidential to the licensee. It is not uncommon for these obligations to be varied or amended. Likewise, assignments of licence interests and changes of company names are frequently the reasons for licence changes. Records on amendments to the licences are not kept in a readily available form and the amount of work involved in compiling such statistics would be disproportionate to the value of the information obtained.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the companies to which petroleum licences have been granted since June 1979 and the price paid for each licence.

Mr. Parkinson: The companies granted petroleum licences since 1979 are published in the London Gazette and Edinburgh Gazette, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The fees and charges for petroleum licences are detailed in the gazette notices inviting applications and in the relevant regulations governing the award of each type of licence, which are also available in the Library of the House. It is not possible to give a total price for every licence awarded as the majority of licences issued since 1979 are still in existence, and the total consideration for the licence will depend on future unknown events, such as whether the licence is voluntarily surrendered before it reaches its full term.

British Coal (Investment)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions he has had with the management of British Coal concerning future investment in the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's agreed capital allocation for 1988-89 is £650 million. How this is allocated between coalfields is a management matter for the corporation.

ENVIRONMENT

Land Availability

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a summary on a regional basis of household projections to the latest available date and, in each case, indicate the monitoring and verification procedures his Department adopts with the county planning authorities as to their returns on land availability.

Mr. Waldegrave: A regional breakdown of household projections was included in the recently published DOE booklet "1985 Based Estimates of Numbers of Households in England etc, 1985-2001", which is available in the Library. I am sending my hon. Friend the relevant extract.

In planning policy guidance note 3 we have recently repeated our advice to local planning authorities that, in consultation with housebuilders, they should undertake regular studies of land availability, to ensure that land supplies match the five-year requirement indicated by the provisions of the development plan. The results of such studies are reported to my Department and (as from 1987) are published in annual progress reports.

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement following his consultation paper setting out proposals for the implementation of the European Community directive on environmental assessment.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are giving careful consideration to the responses to the consultation paper. We intend to lay before Parliament regulations under the European Communities Act 1972 in order to comply with the directive's requirement that member states shall take the necessary measures by 3 July 1988.

Water Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on how many occasions for the last year for which figures are available local water authority consents, as specified under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, were broken in Great Britain;

(2) how many private companies broke water authority consents, as laid down under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, during 1987; and which were the companies concerned;

(3) on how many occasions in the last year for which figures are available the River Calder in West Yorkshire suffered from pollution beyond the agreed consents as laid down by Yorkshire water authority; and if he will list the companies and organisations involved and the frequency of the said polluting;

(4) on how many occasions in the last year for which figures are available consents for suspended solids in British waterways were breached by private companies; on how many occasions consents for monohydric phenols were breached by private companies and on how many occasions consents for ammonia were breached by private companies in respect of consents set by water authorities in the British Isles as laid down by the Control of Pollution Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally, but the public registers which all water authorities are required to maintain contain details of all authorised discharges, including particulars of effluent samples taken.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions when water authority consents were breached by polluters legal action was taken by water authorities and convictions achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Information collected by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department shows that there were about 35 convictions in 1986 following action by water authorities for breaches of discharge consents. The figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total amount of fines collected during 1987 following prosecutions under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, in respect of breach of water authority consents;

(2) on how many occasions during 1987 the maximum fine of £2,000 was levied by a magistrates' court against an offender under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in respect of water pollution due to the breach of water authority consents.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about penalties imposed following prosecutions under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 is collected by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. I understand, however, that information for 1987 is not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on how many occasions British water authorities have been in breach of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in respect of breach of consents for water pollution as agreed with his Department;

(2) which water authorities broke water pollution consents as laid down by the Control of Water Pollution Act 1974 during 1987; and what was the frequency of such breaches.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1986, the first year for which comprehensive data are available, 965 sewage treatment works breached their consents on more than 5 per cent. of occasions for which samples were taken. These works were spread across all water authorities in England and Wales. The final figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the volume of raw human sewage which is allowed to find its way into British estuaries for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Figures are not held centrally. However, most sewage now receives treatment before being discharged to estuaries. As a result, the quality of water in a number of estuaries—including the Humber, Mersey, Tees, Thames and Tyne — has improved in recent years.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken out against water authorities by his Department due to breach of consents and what was the total sum of fines for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: No prosecutions have so far been taken out against water authorities by the Department for breaches of consents. However, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, in examining detailed reasons for non-compliance, will continue to consider whether prosecution is justified in individual cases.

Greater Manchester Exhibition Centre

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what public money has been committed by his Department to the setting up of the Greater Manchester exhibition centre (G-MEC); what information he has about the project's other sources of funding; and what steps he has taken to ensure that this expenditure is cost-effective.

Mr. Trippier: The former central station train hall was converted into the GMEX centre and opened in March 1986. Public sector input to the conversion cost totalled about £13·5 million, of which the urban programme contributed £9·4 million and the European regional development fund provided £4 million. The private sector contribution was approximately £11 million.

At the abolition of the Greater Manchester county council the liabilities and rights in GMEX were transferred to the Greater Manchester Residuary Body. The district council has generally been content for the residuary body to deal with the complex GMEX issues and to protect the interests of the ratepayers, and it remains with the residuary body to continue to handle these matters.

Water Rates

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the combined standing charge to domestic ratepayers for water and sewerage in each of the English water authority areas in 1985, 1986, and 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is set out in the accompanying table.

Water Authority standing charges 1985-86 to 1987-88

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the average annual payments in water rates per household in each of Devon, Somerset, Dorset and Wiltshire, in each year since 1982.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is not available for individual local authorities.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what water rate was charged by (a) the South Western water authority and (b) the Wessex water authority in each year since 1974.

Mr. Moynihan: The information on water rates requested is set out in the accompanying table for each of the English water authorities. The table shows the average household bill for customers connected to both water and sewerage and being charged on the basis of rateable value. Information on average bills for 1988-89 is still being analysed by the Department and is not yet available for publication.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West of 14 April, Official Report, column 234, if he will name the member of the London Residuary Body whose remuneration was reduced.

Mr. Chope: Mr. Jack Esling.

Winget-type Houses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Winget type houses are still in existence in Great Britain; how many have been privately purchased by tenants since the Housing Defects Act 1984; and how many applications for repurchase under the Act have been made by Winget-type householders to local authorities in Great Britain.

Mrs. Roe: Four local authorities in Great Britain have reported 3,836 Winget-type houses, of which 175 were sold to tenants. No information is available on numbers sold since 1984, but these are likely to be small. The authorities have reported 27 applications for assistance under the housing defects legislation, though that figure is not comprehensive. No information is readily available on applications specifically for repurchase on hardship grounds.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards a satisfactory method of structural repair for Winget-type houses with the national house building certificate and local authorities in consultation with his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: No repair system for Winget houses has yet been submitted to PRC Homes Ltd. Repairs are not likely to be easy, given the structure of the house and the small numbers sold.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the housing investment programme was allocated to the repurchase of Winget-type houses within England and Wales in the last available financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities are free to determine their own expenditure priorities within the resources available to them, including their housing investment programme allocations. For 1988-89, £20 million of additional allocations will shortly be distributed to authorities with particular difficulties in meeting their obligations under the housing defects legislation. The allocations will not be made in respect of specific designated house types.

Brentwood (Rates)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage level Brentwood local authority is above his Department's target in the current financial year; and whether it falls within the current criteria for possible rate capping.

Mr. Chope: The setting of expenditure targets has not applied since the financial year 1985-86. Under section 2 of the Rates Act 1984, as modified by the Rate Limitation (Designation of Authorities) (Exemption) Order 1988, made on 13 April, an authority cannot be designated for rate limitation for 1989-90 if its total expenditure in 1988-89 is likely to be less than £13·1 million. Brentwood has reported budgeted total expenditure for 1988-89 of £12·138 million.

Football League

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now seek a meeting with the 92 Football League chairmen to ensure a discussion on matters including crowd safety and English participation in European football; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no immediate plans for a meeting with the 92 Football League chairmen. As I told the hon. Member in my answer on 20 April, I hold regular meetings with the president of the League and other football authorities to discuss counter-hooliganism measures.

Home Extensions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to allow grants to residents for domestic extensions to their home in an effort to ease overcrowding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Improvement grants can already be paid at the discretion of local authorities towards the cost of domestic extensions in certain circumstances, including exceptionally where additional living or bedroom space is required.

Urban Development

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the grant memoranda for urban development corporations.

Mr. Trippier: Payments of grant-in-aid to urban development corporations, in common with payments of grant-in-aid to other non-departmental bodies, are governed by memoranda which set out the terms and conditions on which such payments are made.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the amount made available by his Department under the urban development grant programme for each year since the introduction of the grant in 1982.

Mr. Trippier: The following table shows the urban development grant outturn figures for years since the scheme began.

Urban development grant expenditure

	£ million
1983-84	7
1984-85	15
1985-86	22
1986-87	22
1987-88	[1]25

[1] Estimated.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the amount received by each parliamentary constituency under the urban development grant programme since 1982.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the manner in which new commercial and industrial premises, either presently unassessed or yet to be built, will be treated when the transitional arrangements for the introduction of the unified business rate are implemented.

Mr. Howard: The transitional arrangements are designed to protect those ratepayers who would otherwise face large rate increases between 1989-90 and 1990-91: where there is no liability to rates in the earlier year, transitional protection would be inappropriate. We therefore intend that transitional arrangements should apply to property which is in rateable occupation before 1 April 1990, even if a rateable value has not been entered in the valuation list on that date.

Housing Defects

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government have completed their consultations on the proposed new expenditure limits for grant eligible reinstatement works under the housing defects legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am most grateful to all those who responded to our consultation proposals. We have, as a result, been able to settle the final figures for each designated house type. Our suggestion that the limits should be revised within a structure of four main costs bands was widely welcomed, as indeed were most of the details. Some concern was expressed on whether £27,000 would be sufficient for repairs to the "Reema Hollow Panel" house and we have therefore decided instead to place that type within the top £31,000 cost band.

The new limits will therefore be as follows:

House type	New limit £	Present limit £
Local designations and any new designations	14,000	14,000
Cornish Unit: 1 storey PRC	17,000	14,000
Dorran: 1 storey PRC	—	16,000

Parkinson	—	20,000
Reema Hollow Panel	—	20,000
Wessex: 2 storey PRC	—	24,000
Woolaway	—	20,000

These new limits should enable local authorities themselves to decide the appropriate level of grant, in the majority of cases, without further reference to the Department.

The parliamentary order implementing these new limits has now been made by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and, provided Parliament is content, will come into operation on Tuesday 31 May. My officials will be writing to local authorities, home owners groups and repairers to make sure that all those with an interest are fully aware of the changes.

Trafalgar Square (Statue)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on plans for the erection of a statue on the empty plinth in the north-west corner of Trafalgar square.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no such plans before me.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will ensure that any future official publicity material in relation to the community charge will inform future community charge payers that their name and address may be sold without their consent or knowledge and that their name and address on the register may be inspected by police, Inland Revenue, the Department of Health and Social Security and other organisations without their consent or knowledge.

Mr. Howard: Paragraph 16 of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill would allow regulations to be made requiring the sale of extracts from community charges registers. No decision has yet been taken to make use of that regulation-making power.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis he has concluded that it is in the public interest for the extract of names and addresses from the community charge register to be open for public inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: It is in the public interest that the community charges register should be accurate and up to date. The availability of the extract for public inspection will be of assistance in achieving that aim.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the circumstances in which it will constitute a reasonable step, under clause 6(8) of the Local Government Finance Bill, for the staff of the community charge registration officer to question individuals about their neighbours for the purposes of compiling the community charge register.

Mr. Ridley: It will be for the registration officer to decide, in the first instance, what constitutes a "reasonable step" in each case for the purposes of obtaining information.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether data held by district health authorities will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill;

(2) whether Inland Revenue records will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill;

(3) whether data held by family practitioner committees will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Ridley: Data held by family practitioner committees, the Inland Revenue and district health authorities will not be required to be supplied to community charge registration officers under schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities' records on their own employees and their records on job applicants will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: We are considering whether names and addresses from local authorities' employment records should be made available to community charges registration officers.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the police will be permitted to pass any information on individuals, whether in writing or orally, to the community charge registration officer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether all information held by the police will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Ridley: Information to be supplied to community charges registration officers will be governed by regulations to be made under schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill. Those regulations will exclude police information from the information to be supplied by precepting authorities.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has consulted the Law Society about his proposal made in Standing Committee E, on 11 February, Official Report, column 619, that solicitors will inform the community charge registration officer of an individual's change of address.

Mr. Ridley: No. I assume that those moving house will want their solicitors to notify local authorities of the change of address, as is normal practice now with rates.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all information held by local authority social services departments will be prescribed information under paragraph 9(2)(D) of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Ridley: The information to be supplied to a community charges registration officer by a charging or precepting authority will be limited to the name and address of the person concerned and the dates on or between which he was known to the authority. It will not include the reason for his being known to the authority, or the source of the information within the authority.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any circumstances in which health authorities will be required to provide information to the community charge registration officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: There are no circumstances in which health authorities will be required to provide information to community charges registration officers.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the individuals and organisations from whom he has received representations advocating that local authorities should be required to make available for sale the list of names and addresses from the community charge register.

Mr. Ridley: The Government have received representations in favour of the sale of the extract of addresses and names from the Guild of British Newspaper Editors and the Retail Credit Group.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the community charge registration officer will be permitted to collect any information on children under 17 years.

Mr. Ridley: It will be for each registration officer to decide, in the first instance, what information he needs in order to compile and maintain the register. There is no reason to believe that it will generally be necessary to collect information on children under 17.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of community charge which will apply in the Metropolitan borough of Rotherham.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The community charge applying in any area will depend on a number of factors, in particular, the level of spending in that area at that time. On the basis of 1987-88 spending, I estimate the community charge in Rotherham would have been £189 in the first year of the new system and £252 once the new arrangements were fully in place.

Bathing Water (Survey)

Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now announce the results of the survey of bathing water quality in 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The results for England, Wales and Northern Ireland for the 1987 bathing season are set out in summary form.

The 1987 results show that 262 out of 374 bathing waters in England, Wales and Northern Ireland—70 per cent. — were considered to meet the directive's mandatory bacteriological standards. This shows a significant improvement over 1986, when only 62 per cent. met these standards. The results have been calculated on the same basis in the two years, although a small number of additional waters were included in the 1987 survey.

These results are encouraging and show that good progress is being made in bringing all our identified bathing waters up to EC standards. This is being done through a major programme of capital spending to improve bathing water quality, mainly through the construction of long sea outfalls, and we are currently reviewing this programme with water authorities.

I shall arrange for a more detailed summary of the results to be placed in the Library. The results will also be sent to the Commission in accordance with article 13 of the bathing water directive.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has been in contact with any international human rights organisations in order to ascertain the current situation of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories during the period of restrictions on journalists' freedom of movement and reporting.

Mr. Mellor: We maintain contacts with a number of bodies, including human rights organisations, who monitor developments in the occupied territories.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the Palestinian uprising in the Israeli occupied territories.

Mr. Mellor: Unacceptable actions by the Israeli military and settlers are exacerbating the violence in the West Bank and Gaza. The status quo, characterised by violence and repression, offers no way forward. We urge all concerned to join in the search for a political settlement.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Israeli Government on the situation in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We and our European partners regularly make clear to the Israeli authorities our concern at many aspects of the situation in the occupied territories.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made or intend to make any representations to the Israeli Government about the closure of Palestinian academic institutions on the West Bank and Gaza; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. We have made regular representations to the Israelis about collective punishments, including the closure of educational institutions.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Israeli Government in respect of the difficulties Palestinian farmers have had in exporting agricultural produce to the European Community.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. We have repeatedly stressed to the Israeli Government the importance that we attach to the full implementation of the EC's measures to allow Palestinians in the occupied territories to export direct to the EC, in accordance with the Israeli Government's undertaking of 7 December 1987. Most recently we were fully associated with the representations which the Presidency and Commission made on this subject to Mr. Peres on 31 March.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make representations to the Israeli Government to allow the population of the occupied territories to hold free elections to choose their representatives at any future peace conference.

Mr. Mellor: Elections in the occupied territories are foreseen in the current United States peace proposals, to which we hope Israel will respond constructively.

Swaziland

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the implications of Swaziland's departure from the Rand monetary agreement and participation in the tripatrite monetary area agreement.

Mr. Mellor: The Rand monetary area agreement was renogotiated in April 1986 and became the common monetary area agreement or Tripartite monetary agreement. Under the terms of the new agreement Swaziland has been free to conduct an independent exchange rate policy. In practice, however, she has not felt the need to pursue such a policy and the Swazi currency has remained pegged at par with the rand. The new agreement also frees Swaziland from the need to place rand holdings in a special account in South Africa against the issue of Swazi currency notes and coins. This gives Swaziland flexibility in the management of foreign reserves and in the control of monetary policy.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the Republic of South Africa's policy towards Swaziland.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to urge South Africa to co-operate peacefully with all its neighbours and to refrain from the use of force.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to, or received from, the Swaziland Government with regard to Swaziland's relations with the Republic of South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Palestinian Liberation Organisation

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations

Her Majesty's Government have made to the United States Government about the closure of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation office in Washington DC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a meeting with representatives of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation to seek clarification of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation's position regarding participation in any peace conference; and if he will take such an opportunity to further British-Arab understanding of the Palestine problem.

Mr. Mellor: No. My right hon. and learned Friend does not propose to meet PLO leaders as long as their policy remains ambiguous on renunciation of the use of violence, acceptance of United Nations Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 and recognition of Israel's right to secure existence.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United States Government about the closure of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation observer office at the United Nations.

Mr. Mellor: We and our European partners have on several occasions made clear to the United States Administration our view that the PLO observer mission to the United Nations should be allowed to remain open.

US-USSR Naval Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his NATO allies on the conditions considered necessary for acceptance of the proposal made by Fleet Admiral Vladimir Chesnavia, Commander-in-Chief of the Soviet Navy, that the Soviet Union and the United States cut their naval forces in the Mediterranean to 15 warships and 10 support vessels for each side; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have so far been no discussions within the Alliance about this proposal.

Fiji Ambassador

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 30, what information he has as to by whom the credentials of the ambassador of Fiji expected shortly in this country are to be signed.

Mr. Eggar: None. It is normal practice for ambassadors to present to Her Majesty a Letter of Credence signed by their Head of State.

South Africa (Imports Ban)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the African countries which enforce an import ban on South African goods.

Mr. Mellor: A number of African countries have undertaken to impose import bans on certain South African goods. Details of how such bans have been implemented are not available.

"Death on the Rock"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what outside advice was obtained by Her Majesty's Government in relation to the decision not to ask for an injunction against the Thames Television programme "Death on the Rock".

Mr. Mellor: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons his Department denied the request of Thames Television for information in relation to the Gibraltar killings.

Mr. Mellor: The inquest will be the proper place to provide information relating to the deaths of the terrorists.

Foreign Compensation (Czechoslovakia) Order

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in implementating the Foreign Compensation (Czechoslovakia) Order 1982.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign Compensation Commission has now completed the determination and evaluation of claims against the Czech fund. It is hope to make a payout of 100 per cent. of the assessed value of claims to all successful claimants by the end of May. This will exhaust the balance in the Czech fund of approximately £4 million on the assumption that all applicants accept payment.

Intergovernmental Organisations

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list in the Official Report the intergovernmental organisations, excluding the European Communities, of which the United Kingdom is a member, the amount of the United Kingdom's annual contribution to each organisation, the percentage of each organisation's budget which this represents and which Government Department accounts for each contribution.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1988, c. 312]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office holds no complete record of the intergovernmental organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member. The 1988-89 provision and United Kingdom percentage contribution to the organisations for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office pays the British subscriptions are set out in the following table:

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Finance Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his counterparts from European Community countries; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave on 22 April, at column 580, to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith).

Tax and Prices Index

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to March.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to March 1988 the tax and prices index rose by 1·6 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

5. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest position on monetary compensatory amounts in the intensive livestock sector.

Mr. MacGregor: In the price fixing I am seeking to reduce MCAs for all commodity sectors, and to abolish them in the pigmeat sector, on which there are separate technical issues.

12. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of negative monetary compensatory amounts faced by the pigmeat sector; and what it was six months ago.

Mr. MacGregor: The United Kingdom MCA for pigmeat currently stands at −4·9 per cent. as compared to −10·9 per cent. at the beginning of November 1987.

Sheepmeat

13. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position on the implementation of a sheepmeat stabiliser.

23. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the position on the introduction of a stabiliser to the sheepmeat regime.

25. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken to introduce a stabiliser mechanism into sheepmeat support.

Mr. MacGregor: Following European Council decisions the Community has agreed on a stabiliser for the sheepmeat sector based on maximum guaranteed quantities of 18·1 million ewes for Great Britain and 45·3 million ewes for the rest of the European Community, including Northern Ireland, which are the latest available figures. Sheepmeat support prices will be reduced for the 1988 marketing year from 23 May by the extent to which the maximum guaranteed quantities are exceeded, with separate calculations for Great Britain and the European Community-11 plus Northern Ireland so long as we operate variable premium.

A 1 per cent. overrun will trigger a 1 per cent. price cut. On the basis of Commission estimates of ewe flock sizes in 1988, we expect a 3 per cent. cut in Great Britain prices.

45. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding the latest developments in the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson). I expect discussions on the Commission's proposals for reform of the Community's sheepmeat regime to take place after the price-fixing proposals have been agreed.

Food Aid

18. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to implement the European Community free food scheme.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on developing a scheme for free food for the needy.

Mr. Gummer: As announced on 21 April, butter and beef are being allocated to 127 charitable organisations and local authorities up to the limit of £10·4 million made available to us by the Commission for 1988. The timing and method of distribution to the needy are matters for the individual organisations concerned.

Breeding Ewes

21. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current number of breeding ewes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: From the December 1987 census returns, the figure is put at 19·139 million.

Single European Market

17. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to reduce trade barriers in the food industry in preparation for the single European market.

Mr. Gummer: The European Commission proposed a detailed legislative programme for food law in its 1985 White Paper "Completing the Internal Market." A number of measures are already under discussion in the Council, of which the most important relate to food additives and labelling, foods for particular nutritional uses and food contact materials. We are working for early agreement on these. A number of further proposals remain to be tabled by the Commission.

22. Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made by the food industry in anticipation of unrestricted trade within the European Community from 1992.

Mr. Gummer: I know that the industry is aware of the challenge posed by the creation of a single market by the end of 1992 and is preparing itself in a variety of ways to take advantage of the new opportunities that are opening up. I intend to do everything I can do to encourage it to do so.

41. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the implications for United Kingdom agriculture of the creation of a single European Community market in 1992.

Mr. MacGregor: In common with other sectors of the United Kingdom economy, agriculture should stand to benefit from the opportunities created by the completion of a single market of 320 million people, provided that we remain competitive and conscious of the marketing opportunities for selling the output of the British agriculture and food industries. A key factor will be that monetary compensatory amounts represent an important obstacle to a single market. I therefore strongly support the Commission's aim of abolishing them by the end of 1992.

Apple and Pear Development Council

24. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Apple and Pear Council; and what they discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary last met the chairman of the Apple and Pear Development Council on 3 May, when she attended a meeting of the council. At the meeting, the council's proposed advertising plans for 1988-89 were discussed.

Pig Farmers

26. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to take to help overcome the problems facing United Kingdom pig farmers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) earlier today.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has had from pig farmers on monetary compensatory amounts and on the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a substantial number of representations on this subject. I have made clear in the Agriculture Council my commitment to fight for the abolition of our MCAs in the pigmeat sector.

Bovine Somatotrophin

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the trials at present being conducted, any consideration has been given to whether bovine somatotrophin products could be labelled as such at the point of sale.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Milk from cows involved in the trials is identical over the lactation to that from untreated cows. It is not necessary to treat it differently from other milk.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from consumer organisations concerning the use of bovine somatotrophin in the dairy herd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a considerable number of letters from both consumer organisations and individuals who are generally opposed to the use of BST. The product was fully assessed for safety before the current trials were authorised. I see no justification for any ban on its use.

38. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on criteria for the approval of farms for the bovine somatotrophin trial in the British dairy industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: That is a matter for the holder of the animal test certificate and the farmer concerned.

Green Pound

28. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the value of the green pound.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a number of representations on this subject. The majority have sought a devaluation for pigmeat. Some have concerned all or a number of sectors and supported a measure of devaluation this year. Consumers' representatives have opposed devaluation.

Farm Diversification Scheme

29. Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to encourage farmers to diversify their activities.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope).

Dairy Industry

30. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be meeting the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister and I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

31. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes any increase in funding for the Sea Fish Industry Authority for grant assistance towards new vessels.

Mr. Gummer: No.

39. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority last December and I met him informally in April, when a number of matters concerning the activities of the authority were discussed.

Cod Fishing Ban

33. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the recent cod fishing ban from Cornish fishermen; and what was his response.

Mr. Gummer: I have not received any such representations.

Cereals

34. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will remove oats from the cereal co-responsibility scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The coverage of the cereals co-responsibility levy is a matter for the Agriculture Council. We fully appreciate the arguments for exempting oats from the levy and my right hon. Friend is continuing to argue for this in the current price-fixing negotiations.

Agricultural Land Classification

35. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received following the publication of his consultation document on agricultural land classification in February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The closing date for responses to the consultation document was 25 April and we have received a number of comments of a technical nature. I am looking at these carefully and will be making a statement in due course.

Horticultural Development Council

36. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the Horticultural Development Council.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Full details of the progress made by the Horticultural Development Council in its first 15 months are given in its first annual report, which was laid before the House on 28 April 1988.

Whales

32. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to improve the conservation of whales.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis).

37. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the catching of whales for scientific purposes.

Mr. Gummer: It is the firm view of the Government that all proposals for the taking of whales for research purposes should be thoroughly examined by the scientific committee of the International Whaling Commission, which is the body responsible for the conservation of whale stocks. Only when this body is fully satisfied that the research programme will not endanger the whale stocks concerned, has valid objectives and is properly designed to achieve those objectives, and that these cannot be obtained through benign methods, should such research be undertaken.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the protection of whales from hunting.

Mr. Gummer: In 1985 the International Whaling Commission (IWC) introduced a moratorium on all commercial whaling operations. The United Kingdom has been a leader in this as in other subsequent efforts to stop countries using questionable scientific arguments in order to continue whaling. We shall continue with these efforts in order to ensure the proper conservation of all whale species.

Fish Farms (Pollution)

40. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received regarding the issue of pollution from fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have received no recent representations about pollution from fish farms.

Radioactivity (Farming Losses)

42. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps the Government are taking to ensure that farmers do not continue to lose income due to effects of Chernobyl fall out in north Wales, northern England and Scotland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following detailed discussions with the farmers unions we introduced four separate compensation schemes to help those sheep producers whose enterprises were affected by the restrictions introduced following the Chernobyl incident. Two of these schemes are still operating. One provides full compensation for any market price losses on sheep that have to be marked on their release from the remaining restricted areas: the second offers a payment of £1·30 per head for each sheep monitored and moved out of the restricted area. Both schemes will continue so long as the movement and slaughter restrictions apply.

Research and Development

43. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the Barnes review of agricultural research and development.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 25 April, at column 42.

NFU (Derbyshire Branch)

44. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to meet the Derbyshire branch of the National Farmers Union.

Mr. Gummer: I have visited the branch on two occasions and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary plans to visit the Derbyshire branch of the National Farmers Union on 14 September 1988.

Horses

46. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to restore the role of the horse as an agricultural animal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Traditionally, those horses used in agricultural operations have always been regarded as agricultural animals. It follows that there has been no change in their status, so the question of restoring their role does not arise. I am, however, anxious that horses and ponies used for other purposes should play a full part in revitalising the rural economy and I hope that advantage will be taken of the inclusion of pony trekking and livery in the list of activities qualifying for grant under the farm diversification scheme. There is little doubt that opportunities exist for the development of businesses associated with the breeding, rearing and keeping of horses in rural areas. But, as with other small rural businesses, this calls for a spirit of enthusiasm, dedication and enterprise.

Sheep Farming

47. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of the sheep farming sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The sheep sector is buoyant, returns are good and exports are encouraging.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to encourage the recent trend towards sheep farming in the lowland areas of Britain.

Mr. MacGregor: Farmers must make their own decisions about sheep farming in the context of the sheepmeat regime.

Aerosols

48. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols in his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. I am not aware of any such plans.

Nuclear Waste

49. Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many separate sets of permission he has granted in the past 10 years for the dumping of sewage sludge, capital spoil or other materials such as low-level waste products from nuclear plants in the Bristol Channel within 20 miles of the north Devon coastline.

Mr. Gummer: Licences under the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 and its successor legislation, the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, have been issued from 1978 to date in the area specified as follows:

a. Two licences, renewed annually, for disposal of sewage sludge;
b. Three licences, each for one year, for disposal of dredged spoil arising from new works;
c. Seven licences, each for one year, and one renewed for a total of four years, for disposal of spoil arising from maintenance dredging;
d. 12 licences for disposal of liquid industrial waste; most were renewed for more than one year; all have now terminated.

Five disposal sites have been approved over the period.

Authorisations have been granted jointly with the Secretary of State for the Environment under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for the discharge by pipeline of low-level liquid radioactive waste into the Bristol channel from the Hinkley Point nuclear power stations and from Amersham International plc.

Trade Barriers (Removal)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the benefits for Britain's food industry of the removal of trade barriers within Europe in 1992.

Mr. Gummer: A wide range of benefits are likely to flow from free access to a single market of 320 million people by the end of 1992, though some of these will, of course, arise from proposals still under consideration. I am sure that the industry itself will be making a detailed assessment of the prospective benefits.

Channel Islands (Fishing Rights)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress on negotiations relating to the Channel Islands with particular regard to the right of Channel Islands — registered fishing vessels to operate within (a) British waters, and (b) EEC waters.

Mr. Gummer: There are no negotiations to change the rights of such vessels.

Lowestoft Fishermen

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prospects for Lowestoft inshore fishermen for the rest of the current year in the light of the quota and licensing restrictions on the industry.

Mr. Gummer: Provisional figures for 1987 show a 39 per cent. increase in the value of landings of all species compared with 1986, including a corresponding increase of 36 per cent. for cod. Data for the first two months of 1988 show a 29 per cent. increase for all species over the same period last year, including a 6 per cent. increase for cod.

The figures show that our quota management and restrictive licensing systems are working well for the Lowestoft inshore fleet.

Cod and Plaice

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has had on total allowable catches for cod and plaice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have had no recent representations on total allowable catches for cod and plaice in the North sea or off the west of Scotland. Fishermen's representatives have, however, been in touch with my officials to express their concern at the level of the precautionary total allowable catch for Channel cod (ICES areas VII excluding VIIa, VIII, IX and X). In consultation with the area VII industry advisory committee the fishery was closed on 11 April in the light of catch statistics up to that date.

The ICES advisory committee on fisheries management meets next month and we shall press for a review of the total allowable catch for any stock of importance to the United Kingdom should the committee's scientific assessment indicate that there is any scope to do so.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has had from dairy farmers about their industry in general and European competition in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I receive frequent representations from dairy farmers about their industry. Some are concerned about the prospect of imports of pasteurised milk, but there is increasing confidence that we can compete effectively and that the consumer will continue to favour the freshness and quality of the domestic product.

Cereal Farmers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has had from cereal farmers about their industry in general and European competition in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I receive frequent representations from cereal farmers on a wide range of issues, including their competitive position.

Price Fixing

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on what recent discussions he has held with his counterparts in the European Community in respect of the annual price fixing for agricultural commodities.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission's proposals relating to cereals, fruit and vegetables, sugar, beef and agrimonetary matters were discussed at the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 18-19 April.

Chernobyl Nuclear Accident (Effects)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in the light of the report on his Department's response to the effects of the Chernobyl disaster by the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government have already taken action to reflect the experience gained as a result of the Chernobyl accident, through the new national response plan announced on 30 June 1987. As hon. Members will be aware, the Agriculture Committee of this House is currently examining the Government's response to the accident in the light of detailed evidence submitted by my Ministry, amongst others. I shall give careful consideration to the Committee's report.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of current agricultural research and development is funded by the industry; and what is his estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. MacGregor: Our best estimate is that industry funds about two thirds of the country's total agricultural R and D effort. But many companies do not disclose details of their spending and there are also problems in assessing the contribution of multinationals to the total United Kingdom picture.

TRANSPORT

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to indicate his policy towards acceptance of the conditions laid down by the contributing local authorities to the Settle-Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. My right hon. Friend will indicate his views on this when he announces his conclusions on the future of the line generally.

Icelandair Boeing 727

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which an undercarriage door fell off an Icelandair Boeing 727 and landed in a garden in Southbourne close, Pinner, on 2 May.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority has said that a main undercarriage door fell from an Icelandair Boeing 727 aircraft approaching Heathrow when the door-to-fuselage hinge failed. The airworthiness of Icelandair aircraft is a matter for the authorities in Iceland, who will be responsible for taking any necessary safety action. Section 76(2) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 provides for the recovery of damages in respect of any material loss or damage caused by an article falling from an aircraft.

Cyclists

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has about the dangers caused by irresponsible behaviour by pedal cyclists to themselves and to other road users; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Pedal cyclists are one of the most vulnerable road user groups. In 1986, 271 pedal cyclists were killed and a further 25,858 were injured. Although this is less than in 1985, the casualty rate per mile travelled worsened in 1986.

The Department and local highway authorities work hard to try to reduce these appalling casualties. Many of the accidents to cyclists are caused by other road users.

There is scope for cyclists to do more to help themselves, for example, by wearing conspicuity aids and safety helmets.

The majority of cyclists are sensible law-abiding citizens. There are some who seem to think they are above the law. For instance, there is no excuse for not using lights at night, nor for riding on the pavement or in pedestrian-only areas, which causes particular distress to many elderly and disabled persons.

I am concerned at cyclists ignoring traffic signals and directions. These cyclists should realise that such irresponsible behaviour can increase significantly their chances of being involved in an accident. Cyclists are not above the law. The police can and do take action to prosecute.

Parents have a particular responsibility to ensure that their children know just how dangerous roads can be if not treated with respect. They should encourage their children to take proper training, through the excellent schemes run by RoSPA. The local road safety officer can give advice.

Older cyclists can obtain help and advice on a wide range of issues, including defensive riding techniques and machine maintenance, by joining cycle clubs locally, or by subscribing to a national organisation like the Cyclists' Touring Club.

Many cycling accidents are caused by other road users. The Highway Code now includes much more advice aimed at ensuring that motorists are more aware of cyclists and the problems they face. As part of our current road safety publicity programme, we are also distributing relevant material to local authority road safety officers.

Air Services

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to encourage the development of air services from the regional airports of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not our policy to subsidise air services. We will continue to approve capital allocations to increase regional airport capacity where this is justified. In international negotiations over traffic rights we aim to facilitate air services between regional airports and overseas, provided British interests are safeguarded. In particular, the EC air transport "package", which came into force on 1 January, gives airlines the automatic right to provide services between any United Kingdom regional airport and most major airports in the Community.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to support financial and other links between British and European airlines where this reflects EEC policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The establishment of financial and other links between British and European airlines is a commercial matter for the airlines themselves. We would be involved only if advised by the CAA that such a link would result in a British airline becoming foreign controlled. We would treat each case on its merits.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pigs

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the state of the pig industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The pig industry in Northern Ireland, in common with the remainder of the United Kingdom and the European Community, is going through a difficult period due to an over-supply of pigs and poor prices for pigmeat.

To help ease the situation an aids to private storage scheme was introduced throughout the Community in February 1988 to remove surplus pigmeat from the market. To date just over 200 tonnes have been put into store in Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, the level of monetary compensatory amount paid on bacon exported to the United Kingdom has, due to the increasing strength of sterling, fallen from 15·8 per cent. in October 1987 to 6·1 per cent. at the end of April 1988.

Road Repairs

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to repair the footway and roadway between the Millifle end of Donaghadee and the bends at Croaghpatrick; when will this road towards Ballyvester be realigned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has no proposals at present to improve any of these roads as their condition is not considered to justify such works.

Potatoes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the state of the seed potato and ware potato industry.

Mr. Viggers: Total shipments of seed potatoes from the 1987 crop are in excess of 50,000 tonnes compared with just over 52,000 tonnes at the corresponding time from the 1986 crop. This has been achieved in spite of a 3 per cent. fall in the area of seed potatoes planted in 1987 and some problems with seed exported.

Ware potato prices for the 1987 crop have been lower than for the 1986 crop, but the cumulative average grower's price at 15 April was £62·06 per tonne. This is well in excess of the target price of £46 per tonne set under the market support arrangements. Prices have been easing back over recent weeks, but this has had only a marginal effect on the cumulative average grower's price for the crop.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the allocation of money to charities in Northern Ireland in respect of the retail prices index understatement on social security benefits and centrally administered pensions.

Mr. Needham: The balance remaining out of the savings attributable to the RPI error in the social security uprating in Northern Ireland, after allowing for the compensatory payments to individual beneficiaries, is about £250,000. This will be made available to voluntary organisations, and particularly to those whose work would benefit the groups affected by the error.

To ensure as wide and as equitable a distribution as possible, I have decided that the money should be available to regional voluntary organisations and to local groups. The Department of Health and Social Services will administer part of the new fund, in the form of grants to individual regional bodies for specific purposes, and the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust, which has a well-proven track record in this field, will distribute the balance in the form of grants to more localised community projects serving the same target groups.

The Department of Health and Social Services will now be inviting applications for a share of the available money, and the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust will be announcing details of how local groups should apply.

The savings accruing to the superannuation schemes for Northern Ireland civil servants, teachers and health and personal social services staff amount to about £158,000. In the case of the Civil Service, payments totalling £52,500 were made by the Department of Finance and Personnel to the Civil Service retirement fellowship, the Civil Service benevolent fund and the Northern Ireland Civil Service sports association in the financial year 1987-88. In the case of retired teachers and health and personal social services staff consideration is being given to identifying the most appropriate arrangements for distributing the sums involved for the benefit of the groups of staff concerned.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints have been made against police officers in each of the Royal Ulster Constabulary sub-divisions controlled from the divisional headquarters at Strand road, Londonderry in each of the last five years; what was the result of the cases in each of those sub-divisions; and how often more than one complaint was made against the same officer and with what result.

Mr. Stanley: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information about complaints in the police division controlled from Strand road, Londonderry in each of the past five years is as follows:

Complaints against the police—RUC "N" division

Complaints	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

Job Seekers (Travel to London)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for the last 12 months for which figures are available (a) how many persons from Northern Ireland have received assistance from public funds to travel to London to seek work, and (b) how many families and individuals from Northern Ireland have had to be given accommodation in London at public expense while seeking work in London; what is the average period such accommodation was occupied; and what was the cost.

Mr. Viggers: Under the travel-to-interview scheme the Department of Economic Development assisted a total of 275 people to travel to interviews in London during the 12 months ended 31 March 1988.

Under the supplementary benefit scheme, which ceased on 11 April, help was available in limited circumstances to people on supplementary benefit to enable them to find work within the United Kingdom provided they did not qualify for assistance under the travel-to-interview scheme. Information is not held centrally about the numbers of persons assisted and could be obtained only at disaproportionate cost.

Information is not available about the numbers of families or individuals from Northern Ireland who had to be given accommodation in London at public expense while seeking work there.

Brussels (Ministerial Visit)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the official visit to Brussels by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers).

Mr. Viggers: I visited Brussels on 20 and 21 April, where I had discussions with the Commissioner for Regional Policy and senior officials of the Commission. Our discussions covered Northern Ireland economic issues, ways in which the Province might benefit to an increased extent from the reformed structural funds, the pathfinder initiative, our approach to preparing Northern Ireland for the completion of the single European market by 1992 and the European enterprise conference scheduled to be held in Northern Ireland from 28 September to 1 October next.

I was encouraged by the Commission's recognition of the Province's particular problems and its willingness to be as flexible as possible in assisting future developments.

Irish Institute for European Affairs

Sir Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the extent of the Northern Ireland participation in the Irish Institute for European Affairs in Leuven; what is the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Construction trainees from Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland participated in the renovation of the institute's buildings. Since 1985 the Department of Economic Development and AnCO (the industrial training authority in the Republic) have jointly sponsored a series of European export marketing programmes training unemployed graduates to become export marketing managers. In addition, the institute is used for a variety of seminars, conferences, public lectures and business receptions by both the private and public sectors.

The cost of the institute to Northern Ireland funds in the year ended 31 March 1988 was £90,255, including annual subvention of £20,000 payable by the Department of Economic Development over a period of three years, matching a corresponding sum paid by the authorities in the Republic of Ireland.

WALES

Rating Reform

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate, assuming the full replacement of rates by the community charge, and the implementation of the Local Government Finance Bill for non-domestic rates and grant in 1988-89 (a) for Wales as a whole, (b) for each class of local authorities (including community councils), and (c) for each county and district authority area the following items in thousands of pounds: (i) expenditure, (ii) revenue support grant (where appropriate), (iii) share of non-domestic rate pool (where appropriate), (iv) community contribution and (v) adult population together with (vi) the community charge for each county and district authority, showing separately for each district area the average community council charge and (vii) the total community charge; and what is the average rate per adult for 1988-89 in each district area.

Mr. Grist: Illustrative figures are given in the table. These figures are provisional, and will be updated when better information is received from all local authorities. No allowance has been made for the transitional safety-net arrangements. Average rate bills per adult are on a basis comparable with the community charge figures and exclude any use of balances. The calculations are based on present needs assessments which are under review. The community contribution for community councils is equal to their expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aflatoxin

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the number and respective weight of imported cargoes of peanuts containing aflatoxin greater than the voluntary limit of 0·03 mg/kg for each of the last five years; and if he will indicate in respect of each cargo the ultimate purpose for which the peanuts were used.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not available.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has consulted the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds concerning the introduction of statutory limits of aflatoxin in nuts.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria are applied in determining the safe level of aflatoxin in nuts and nut products used for (a) human consumption, (b) feed stuffs for birds and animals which are kept for the production of meat, wool, and so on, (c) pet food and (d) wild bird food.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 21 April at column 565 and the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Caerphilly on 18 April at column 279.

Licensed Trade (Tenant's Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the working of the code of practice on tenant's security in respect of the licensed trade.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has received very few complaints from tenants about the working of the code since it was introduced by the Brewers' Society in 1973. I am, however, aware of the view expressed by some hon. Members concerning its application in two recent cases.

TRANSPORT

Carlisle-Settle Railway Line

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received on the future of the Settle-Carlisle railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: I continue to receive various representations from hon. Members local authorities and others with an interest in the line. I hope that my right hon. Friend will be able to make an announcement about the line's future shortly.

Road Traffic Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total amount of road traffic from the Republic of Ireland which passed through the United Kingdom on its way to the continent of Europe during the last year for which full figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No figures are available for car or coach traffic. Regarding goods traffic, it is estimated that in 1987 around 14,000 Irish-registered road goods vehicles left British ports for mainland Europe, most of which would have entered Great Britain from the Republic carrying (or going to fetch) goods in transit to (or from) mainland Europe. This and earlier figures are published in "Road Goods Vehicles on Roll-on Roll-off Ferries to Mainland Europe, 4th Quarter 1987" Department of Transport bulletin (88)1, a copy of which is in the Library. The figure does not include non-Irish foreign vehicles carrying Irish trade—a much smaller number; nor does it include British vehicles, either towing trailers making transit journeys, or otherwise carrying Irish trade with Europe between British ports.

Rail Service (Bedford-St. Pancras)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any recommendations from the emergency services regarding the rail service between Bedford and St. Pancras.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no such recommendations. Perhaps my hon. Friend could write if he has any specific incident in mind.

M40

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give his latest estimate for completion of the M40.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction of some sections of the M40 extension between Oxford and Birmingham is already under way. Subject to the outcome of the recent public inquiry, work on the final section between Waterstock and Wendlebury, near Oxford, could start next year to enable the whole motorway extension to be open to traffic in 1991.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review his conclusions on the adequacy of the proposed two-lane section of the M40 to take anticipated traffic flows up to the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposals for the Waterstock to Wendlebury section of the M40 were the subject of a public inquiry which ended in January. Before reaching final decisions on the standard of the road, we will carefully consider all the views expressed, together with the recommendations of the independent inspector.

Continental Passenger Trains

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurances he has received from British Rail that its main lines will be able to be used by continental passenger trains, following the opening of the Channel tunnel, without the need for passengers to change to British Rail rolling stock to complete their journey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Most existing continental passenger trains are too wide and high for much of the British system. British Rail and French and Belgian railways are therefore jointly planning to operate a new fleet of high-speed passenger trains and night sleepers through the Channel tunnel. These trains will be designed to operate on all three networks.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how may council tenants over the ages of 70, 80 and 90 years, respectively, have (a) applied to buy and (b) bought their council homes for each year since 1980 for which figures are available.

Mrs. Roe: Information is not collected on the age of tenants applying to buy or buying their council homes.

Licensed Trade Tenants

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the question of licensed trade tenants' security; if he will bring forward proposals for making them subject to the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received three representations since 1985, in addition to those received by MAFF. In 1985 my Department reviewed the Landlord and Tenant Act, part II, including proposals for extending its provisions to cover licensed trade tenants. Wide consultation revealed insufficient grounds for amending the legislation; that remains the position.

Water Authorities

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the increases in both domestic and business charges by all the regional water authorities for each of the past five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested on increases in domestic water charges was set out in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 29 June 1987 Official Report, column 46. Information on business charges will require time to prepare. I will answer that part of the hon. Member's as soon as it is available.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the annual return on assets by all the regional water authorities for each of the past five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is set out for English water authorities in the table.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are given to regional water authorities on the revaluation of assets which are underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Guidance on accounting matters is given to each water authority in a letter from the Department which is reproduced in their annual accounts which are laid before Parliament and placed in the Library. The Water Authorities (Return on Assets) Order 1987, SI No. 2022, 1987 prescribes the basis on which assets are to be valued for the purposes of the order.

Norfolk House, East Kilbride

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the Property Services Agency has made of the potential of Norfolk house in East Kilbride for the location of Civil Service work, what number of posts of (a) temporary and (b) a permanent nature are to be located on the site; and what is the nature of the work to be undertaken.

Mr. Chope: There is no current Civil Service requirement for accommodation in the East Kilbride area for which Norfolk house would be suitable. Norfolk house is surplus to requirements and is on the market for disposal.

Combustion Plants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the oil industry concerning the European Community directive on large combustion plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My officials have regular discussions with representatives of the oil industry about this draft directive, and my noble Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water was recently in correspondence with the president of the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association on this subject.

London Boroughs (Debts)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Members for Hornsey and Wood Green of 28 April and for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 14 March, Official Report, column 459, why the information placed in the Library is incomplete for the London boroughs; and if he will now provide the information on indebtedness for all London boroughs.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 4 May 1988]: The information, which related to 1986-87, placed in the Library is incomplete because the following authorities had not submitted returns: Camden, Greenwich, Islington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Southwark, Brent, Ealing, Haringey, Harrow. Southwark and Harrow have since submitted returns, but the table provides information for all London boroughs for 1984-85, the latest year for which complete information is available.

Property Transactions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make a public announcement on the completion of any property transactions involving the acquisition of new accommodation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 May 1988]: No. This would not be practicable as the PSA is constantly relinquishing and acquiring property as part of the management of a civil estate comprising about 8,800 properties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Newtownards Vehicle Inspection Centre

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in relation to the Newtownards vehicle inspection centre (a) the operating hours each day, (b) the number of vehicles being tested each day and (c) the present waiting list of vehicles requiring tests; and what provision there is at present for overtime work at this centre.

Mr. Needham: The operating hours of the Newtownards vehicle inspection and driving test centre are 8.25 am-4.55 pm, Monday to Friday inclusive. The number of vehicles being tested each day is 110. On 22 April 1988 the waiting time for test appointments was four weeks for goods vehicles and six weeks for private cars.

There is no provision at present for overtime working at this centre.

Car Parking (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what free car parking he proposes (a) to retain and (b) to provide in Newtownards for persons travelling into the town to work in shops and commercial premises.

Mr. Needham: It is the intention of the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) that the existing car parks at Ann street, Upper Court street and Talbot street, Newtownards should remain free of charge for the foreseeable future.

Potatoes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many potato producers in Northern Ireland have been seriously affected by the potato surplus between September 1987 and March 1988.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 4 May 1988]: Information on the effect on individual producers is not available to the Department of Agriculture.

Army Information Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which officials in charge of the Army Information Services at HQ, Northern Ireland, since 1971 have been interviewed by an official inquiry or by other official persons in connection with (a) psychological information, (b) an alleged shoot to kill policy, (c) alleged political disinformation, and (d) any alleged use of forged documentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 April 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

It is not the practice to comment on specific individuals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Southern Africa

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on relations with Southern Africa in the light of the Gersony report, sponsored by the United States State Department, on conditions in Mozambique; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We encourage peaceful solutions to regional problems. Our substantial aid programme contributes to the relief of suffering and the promotion of economic development in Mozambique. The Gersony report bears out our view of RENAMO as responsible for widespread and premeditated atrocities and as lacking any general support amongst the Mozambican people.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received since 1 January regarding South African-backed incursions into Mozambique; what representations he has made to the South African Government on such matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no evidence of recent incursions. We condemn cross-border violations in either direction.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Irish Republic about the claim to part of the United Kingdom embodied in articles 2 and 3 of the Republic's constitution; and what further representations he intends to make.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: None. Article 1 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement explicitly states that both Governments "affirm that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would only come about with the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland."

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why no Government dwellings were completed on St. Helena in 1987-88, and how many are expected to be completed in 1988-89.

Mr. Eggar: No Government dwellings were built last year on St. Helena because the Public Works Department was fully committed to other major projects such as the Prince Andrew school and the bulk fuel installation. However, £165,000 was made available from our aid programme for use by the private sector through the Housing Assistance Board.

St. Helena's housing policy for 1988-89 is still under consideration and it is not yet known how many dwellings will be built this year.

DEFENCE

Chile (Arms Purchases)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any inquiries from the Government of Chile regarding the possible purchase of Javelin anti-aircraft missiles from Short Brothers.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive British Governments not to comment on matters relating to the supply of defence equipment to foreign Governments.

AQD Laboratories, Harefield

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet reached a decision as to whether there is a continuing service requirement for the AQD Laboratories at Harefield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: AQD, Harefield, closed on 26 February 1988. Since there is no further defence requirement for the site it will be passed to the PSA which will arrange for its disposal on the open market.

AWACS

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects each of the seven Boeing AWACS aircraft ordered in place of Nimrod AEW, to be available for active service in the Royal Air Force; to what extent these anticipated in-service dates differ from those originally promised and announced; and if the delivery and technical performance of the various auxiliary systems that Boeing is purchasing from its subcontractors are now guaranteed.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced to the House on 18 December 1986, at column 1352, the AWACS aircraft will be delivered into RAF service starting in 1991. Since that announcement there has been no slippage in the anticipated in-service dates.

The delivery and technical performance of the various auxiliary systems that Boeing is purchasing from its subcontractors form part of Boeing's overall contractual commitment to deliver complete AWACS aircraft meeting our performance requirements. The programme is currently on schedule with no major technical problems.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give figures for trade between Israel and Britain, for each of the past five years, in military products.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to give details of defence equipment sales. We maintain restrictions on arms sales to Israel because of the continuing Israeli military presence in Lebanon.

Ammunition and Explosives (Storage)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 20 April concerning ammunition and explosives stored near to population areas, whether, following the Donnington fires, he will review his Department's policy in connection with (a) planning applications which involve the encroachment of buildings towards the defence estate, (b) the possible removal of ammunition and explosives stores from current defence estate sites where population areas have built-up nearby, and (c) the encroachment of the defence estate toward residential areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am satisfied with the present procedures for consultation between local planning authorities and my Department in respect of planning applications for developments in areas surrounding certain Ministry of Defence establishments, including depots holding ammunition and explosives, neither of which are stored at Donnington. There are, however, major difficulties in relocating ammunition and explosives depots from those areas which have already become built-up, although stringent safety rules are enforced. We are equally concerned to ensure that hazard zones around certain Ministry of Defence establishments do not affect members of the public and, although the Crown is not bound by the Town and Country Planning Acts, it is my Department's policy to observe similar planning procedures.

US Nuclear Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the implications for continued sharing of nuclear defence information under the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement of the leaked documents on the maintenance of US nuclear submarines at Holy Loch published in The Scotsman newspaper on 22 April;

(2) what is his assessment of the implications for the operational practice of United States submarines allocated to NATO duty of the leaked documents published in The Scotsman newspaper on 22 April originating at the Holy Loch submarine base;

(3) what are the implications of the leaked documents from the United States naval base at Holy Loch published in The Scotsman newspaper on 22 April for the ordering programme for the Polaris-Poseidon material management system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The loss of internal United States Navy documents which I understand were unclassified is a matter for the United States authorities. I am assured that there are no implications of the kind referred to by the hon. Member.

Atomic Energy Authority

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any work is carried out for his Department at the Atomic Energy Research establishment operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at Harwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: MOD uses the services of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority establishment at Harwell as appropriate on normal commercial terms.

Corsham Bunker Complex

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the Corsham Bunker complex belonging to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations making speculative remarks about the Corsham site, on which I am not prepared to comment.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the purpose and functions of his Department's Corsham Bunker complex.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

Mr. Colin Wallace (Dossier)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces and civil servants have been interviewed in connection with the dossier of information submitted to the Prime Minister on 1 November 1984 by Mr. Colin Wallace.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 20 July 1987 at columns 93-94.

Irish Republic

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, in each year from 1973 to the current date, members of the armed forces on duty have crossed into the Irish Republic.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: From records held, the number of occasions when members of Her Majesty's armed forces on duty have crossed into the Republic of Ireland by year since 1982 is as follows. The figures include crossings both on land and in the air. Records of such occasions prior to 1982 are not available.

Year	Number
1982	45
1983	31
1984	31
1985	27
1986	50
1987	55
[1]1988	11

[1] As at 27 April 1988.

On the vast majority of occasions the border was crossed as a result of navigational errors; these incidents were notified to the Irish Government. On the remaining occasions, the border was crossed with the agreement of the Irish Government.

Covert Operations (Forgery)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the forging of documents by Army printing presses in Northern Ireland, in connection with covert operations.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: It is not the practice to comment on operational matters.

Northern Ireland Training and Advisory Team

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 28 March, Official Report, column 364, when information on the Northern Ireland training and advisory team became unavailable.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I have nothing to add to my previous answer.

Royal Engineer Survey Troop

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 28 March, Official Report, column 364, on what basis detailed records relating to the Royal Engineer survey troop were destroyed or disposed of.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: They were destroyed when no longer required.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 28 March, Official Report, column 364, what other Royal Engineer survey troops were stationed at Castledillon in 1974-75; and what was their numerical designation.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: None.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 28 March, Official Report, column 364, on what date the Royal Engineer survey troop was formed; and on what date it was dispersed;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 28 March, Official Report, column 364, on what date the 4th Field Survey Troop, Royal Engineers, was formed; and when it was disbanded.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: 4 Field Survey Troop Royal Engineers was formed in early 1973 at Castledillon, and disbanded in late 1975, since there was no longer a requirement for the unit.

Records (Destruction)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the destruction of original records kept by his Department.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The policy regarding the destruction of original records by the Ministry of Defence is governed by the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967.

Army Information Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the scripts of Army Information Services presentations at Commander Land Forces study days at Army Headquarters Northern Ireland from January 1975 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of all printed material designed and printed at Army Headquarters Northern Ireland and disseminated to the public from 1972 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: No. Comprehensive records of such published documents since 1972 could not be compiled without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions members of the Army Information Services have planted hoax bombs between 1973 and the current date; and whether such devices were subsequently dismantled by an Army explosive ordnance disposal team.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I am aware of none. Such an act would not have been part of the duties of a member of the Army Information Services and would have been illegal.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if any members of the Army Information Services in Northern Ireland, including those involved in psychological operations, have ever carried or been involved in possession of captured terrorist weapons or explosives in public places from 1972 to the current date;

(2) if, from 1972 to the current date, members of the Army Information Services in Northern Ireland, have ever been asked to masquerade as members of paramilitary groups; and whether such activity included the carrying of captured terrorist weapons or explosives.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I am aware of none.

Firearms (Silencers)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions firearms fitted with silencers have been used by members of the Army in Northern Ireland against civilian targets in each year since 1972.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I am aware of none.

Psychological Operations

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where courses have been held on psychological warfare and psychological operations in which his Department was involved in each year from 1972 to the current date in the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Courses were held, until their closure, at the joint warfare establishment at Old Sarum, Salisbury (1972-78), and at the joint warfare wing of the National Defence College at Latimer (1978-82). Since 1982 responsibility for the courses has transferred to MOD central staff. With regard to courses in the United States of America, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 7 March 1988 at column 59.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis civil servants or Army personnel have been selected to attend psychological warfare and psychological operations courses from 1972 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Information for the period 1972-73 is no longer available. From 1973 to the present day eligibility for attendance has extended to any officer of the rank of lieutenant-commander or equivalent and above. For those MOD posts which may require a further understanding of psychological operations techniques attendance is mandatory before appointment is taken up.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the syllabus of courses in psychological warfare and psychological operations in which his Department was involved (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the United States of America, from 1972 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the officers commanding the information policy unit, information liaison unit and the information planning unit in Northern Ireland, underwent training in psychological operations or psychological warfare in the United States of America from 1971 to the current date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 7 March 1988 at column 59.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of the BBC from 1971 to current date attended courses or seminars at his Department's establishments relating to psychological operations or psychological warfare activities.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The present courses are open only to students from Ministry of Defence and NATO military and civilian staffs.

Joint Warfare Establishment and Joint Intelligence Centre

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list any non-governmental individuals or organisations, in each year from 1972 to current date, which visited the joint warfare establishment or joint intelligence centre.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: No records of visits by individuals from non-governmental organisations are available prior to 1978. From the records available from 1978 to date, apart from guest speakers, no such visits to the joint warfare wing or its successor establishment can be identified.

Security Forces (Civilian Deaths)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any civilians have been shot by members of the security forces using captured terrorist weapons.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I am aware of none.

Exercise Clockwork Orange

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries were undertaken by his Department into the circumstances surrounding the operation in Northern Ireland known as Clockwork Orange.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 20 July 1987 at columns 93-94.

Captain Fred Holroyd, Retired

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to the answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 362, if he is able to specify the various dates when assistance was given by his Department to the Royal Ulster Constabulary into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired);

(2) pursuant to the answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 362, if he is able to specify what appropriate assistance was given to the Royal Ulster Constabulary into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired);

(3) pursuant to the answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 362, from what grade or grades of civil servant appropriate assistance was given to the Royal Ulster Constabulary into the allegations of Captain Fred Holroyd (retired).

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on that occasion.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving or former serving members of the Ulster Defence Regiment have been charged with criminal offences since 1971.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, since September 1984, 234 members of the UDR have been convicted in the civil courts of criminal offences whilst still serving. These figures exclude minor motoring offences. In the case of serious offences, the soldiers convicted were discharged from the regiment in accordance with UDR regulations. Comparable information is not available before September 1984. Information is not held by my Department about former serving members of the UDR who were convicted of offences after they had left the regiment.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 7 March, Official Report, column 60, on what date Mr. Colin Wallace was commissioned into the Ulster Defence Regiment; and on what date he was promoted to captain.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 April 1988]: As I explained in my letter of 18 April to the hon. Member, Mr. Wallace was granted a commission as a part-time member of the UDR in the rank of second-lieutenant and was granted the acting rank of captain both with effect from 18 January 1972.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police to provide evidence to support the chief constable's statement of 27 April, that the application was properly and thoroughly inquired into in the cases of applications for the grant of a firearms certificate dated 23 November 1986, the variation to the certificate dated 23 March 1987 and the variation to the certificate dated 14 July 1987 of the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Juvenile Offenders

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number of 14-year-olds given custodial sentences in 1986 by constabulary area; and if he will express these figures also as a percentage of juveniles cautioned or found guilty of an offence in a juvenile court.

Mr. John Patten: The information available centrally which may be incomplete, is given in the following table. Data relating to juveniles found guilty at magistrates' courts giving a breakdown by police force area and offence group are published annually in tables S3.2(B) and S3.2(C) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Vol. 3". Similar information about juvenile cautioning is available in tables S3.7(B) and S3.7(C) of this publication, copies of which are in the Library.

Nationality

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed in the nationality division of his Department to process nationality applications in each month since April 1987.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The numbers of staff employed in case-working groups processing nationality applications were:

	Numbers

April	151
May	148
June	152

September	151
October	149
November	148
December	150

January	148
February	149
March	149
April	147

These figures do not include staff processing inquiries about citizenship status, dealing with requests for application forms and maintaining the computer records which support the processing of cases.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans were made by the nationality division of his Department in early 1987 to deal with the expected extra work caused by the nationality deadlines; and how those plans were amended in October 1987 when the extent of that extra demand became apparent.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 3 May 1988]: An additional case-working group (17 staff) was created on 1 April 1987; and further provision was made to increase from 150 to 170 the number of staff wholly employed on considering applications with effect from 1 April 1988.

In August 1987, case-working resources were diverted to responding promptly to general inquiries about citizenship and supplying application forms and to recording the receipt of new applications. When it became apparent that these measures were insufficient to deal with the growing volume of new applications being received, overtime working began on 8 November and has been in operation ever since. The full extent of the demand did not become apparent until after December 1987, when 100,000 citizenship applications were submitted in one month. Further measures have been taken since then, including the ones I announced in the House on 16 February 1988 at column 683.

Because of the priority accorded to these matters, and recruitment difficulties in the Croydon area, it has not yet been possible to achieve the projected increase in case-working capacity provided for from 1 April 1988. That will be done as soon as possible. We hope also to announce shortly detailed plans for substantial additional case-working capacity at a new location, probably on Merseyside.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecutors (Manual of Guidance)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the manual of guidance issued to Crown prosecutors in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement as to the criteria upon which a decision to prosecute is based, as set out in the manual.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1988, c. 574]: I have now had the opportunity of considering with the Director of Public Prosecutions whether it would be proper to place the manuals of guidance issued to Crown prosecutors in the Library. It is the view of both the Director and myself that such a course would be inappropriate.

The requirement in section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 to publish guidance for Crown prosecutors expressly refers to the general principles upon which certain key prosecution decisions are taken. As I stated in my answer of 22 April, those general principles are set out and illustrated in the code for Crown prosecutors. The terms of section 10 do not, in my view, require the Director to make available for inspection detailed internal guidance, instructions, and so on, issued to assist Crown prosecutors in the exercise of their duties and assembled for convenience in manual form.

Both the Director and I continue to recognise the need for the general principles of prosecution decision-making to be as open and easily understood as possible. With this objective in mind, the Director is considering whether, and, if so, to what extent, the existing published criteria might usefully be expanded.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Achievements

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the achievements of Her Majesty's Government since May 1979 in respect of the whole of the United Kingdom and also in respect of Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: The rate of inflation has been reduced to levels not seen for 20 years. The United Kingdom is well into its seventh successive year of steady growth, at an average annual rate of 3 per cent.; in 1987 national output grew faster than in any other major industrialised country. Business investment reached a record level in 1987 and is forecast to rise by a further 9 per cent. in 1988. Since 1981, United Kingdom manufacturers have maintained their volume share of world trade, following decades of decline; and in 1987 their share increased slightly. The level of the United Kingdom's net overseas assets has increased sevenfold since 1979 to about £90 billion by the end of 1987, yielding earnings of over £5·5 billion in 1987. Manufacturing productivity has risen at an average annual rate of over 5 per cent. since 1980—faster than in any other major industrialised country, after being at the bottom of the league in the previous two decades. In 1987, non-North sea company profitability rose to 10·5 per cent., its highest level for over 20 years, having risen in every year since 1981.

The Government have continued to maintain sound public finances, and have now balanced the budget. In 1987-88, for only the second year since the beginning of the 1950s, the Government made a net repayment of public sector debt. The burden of debt interest has fallen, and this, together with continued improvements in efficiency, has enabled the Government to increase spending on priority programmes while ensuring that public expenditure continues to fall as a proportion of GDP.

The Government have pursued a substantial programme of tax reform. The aim has been to create a climate in which businesses can thrive and individual initiative and risk-taking are rewarded. The basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 33 to 25 per cent., and the main personal allowances are fully 25 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1978-79. Nine higher rates of income tax running up to 83 per cent. have been replaced by a single higher rate of 40 per cent. A new system of independent taxation for husbands and wives will apply from 1990. Business taxation has been radically restructured, leaving the United Kingdom corporation tax rate one of the lowest in the industrialised world. Seventeen rates of capital transfer tax running up to 75 per cent. have been replaced by a single rate of 40 per cent. on inheritance; and the taxation of purely inflationary capital gains has been ended. Five taxes and a number of unjustified tax breaks have been abolished.

Since 1979, the Government have privatised 17 major companies and a number of other enterprises. As a result of this policy and tax reliefs designed to encourage shareholding, the number of individual shareowners in the United Kingdom, at one in five of the adult population, has trebled since 1979. Getting on for 40 per cent. of the state-owned industrial sector the Government inherited in 1979 has been returned to private enterprise. And the privatisation programme is set to continue — the Government have already announced their intention to privatise the electricity supply industry, the water authorities in England and Wales and British Steel.

The Government have introduced a large number of measures to improve the operation of markets. Pay, price and dividend controls have been abolished, together with controls on foreign exchange, bank lending and hire purchase, and restrictions on industrial and office development. Incentives have been increased by tax reductions and reform and by the restructuring of national insurance contributions. The Government have introduced a tax relief to encourage the spread of profit-related pay.

Employment in Great Britain has risen by almost 1·7 million since March 1983, the longest period of sustained employment growth in almost 30 years. Unemployment throughout the United Kingdom has fallen by over 700,000 from its July 1986 peak and the unemployment rate is now below the European Community average. It has fallen in all regions of the country with the biggest falls over the last year in the west midlands, the north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside. Long-term unemployment in the United Kingdom fell by a record 234,000 in the year to January, whilst unemployment among under-25s is at its lowest level for over five years and is now much lower than the European Community average.

Changes in employment legislation and measures to assist labour mobility have improved the operation of the labour market. Many restrictions on the employment of women have been lifted.

The Government's policies have helped the small firms sector to grow rapidly and to make a substantial contribution to employment and wealth creation. About 1 million additional jobs were created in the United Kingdom by small firms and self-employment between 1982 and 1984, and since 1980 the number of small firms has grown by around 500 a week. Self-employment has risen by over 1 million since June 1979. The small firms service provides advice and support for small firms. The enterprise allowance scheme has helped over 300,000 people in Great Britain to set up in business on their own. The Government have helped create a network of local enterprise agencies to encourage the development of small firms.

The Government have introduced entirely new approaches to delivering practical help for unemployed people to get back to work. Since July 1986, some 3·5 million personal interviews have been carried out under restart, 90 per cent. of them resulting in an offer of positive help from the range of opportunities available, including job-clubs and the still expanding enterprise allowance scheme. The Government have taken steps to ensure that benefits are properly paid to those who are entitled to them and not to others. The work of jobcentres, previously administered by the Manpower Services Commission, and that of the unemployment benefit service have now been brought together in the employment service, with the priority of giving effective help to unemployed people, especially the long-term unemployed, and placing them in jobs and training.

The Government have revolutionised vocational education and training for young people through the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI) and two-year youth training scheme (YTS). The TVEI became a national scheme last autumn. Over 1·5 million young people have had vocational training under YTS, and a wide range of courses leading towards a vocational qualification is available to all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers. From September this year, all young people not going into a job or staying in full-time education will be guaranteed YTS until their 18th birthday. Unemployment on social security benefit will no longer be an option for this group.

The Government have announced a major new programme, employment training, building on the experience and successes of the community programme and the new job training scheme. The Government will guarantee employment training or a place in the enterprise allowance scheme or in a job club to all those aged between 18 and 25 who have been unemployed for between six and 12 months, and also aim to provide employment training for those over 25 who have been unemployed for two years. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is establishing a clear system of relevent vocational qualifications.

Legislation has been passed protecting members against abuses of trade union power, extending their rights to influence the affairs of their unions and restoring the balance in industrial relations between managements and unions. In particular, secondary blacking and picketing have been made unlawful and unions are required to hold ballots before strike action.

The Government have stepped up the attack on urban decay and have given priority to encouraging investment in inner city areas through a range of measures amounting to some £3 billion in 1988-89. A new action for cities drive was launched in March 1988 which included a new urban development corporation in Sheffield and the extension of the existing corporation in Merseyside; streamlined grants to encourage the development of inner city land and buildings; more help for small businesses in inner city areas; further Government support for links between schools and employers; new crime prevention initiatives; and better inner city roads. To help pull together the various Government programmes involved, city action teams have been established based in Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne and Nottingham. At local level, 16 inner city task forces support projects which open up job and enterprise opportunities for local residents.

The Government have launched a major five-year campaign to ensure that business in every part of the country is fully prepared to take advantage of the single market that will exist in the European Community by 1992.

The Government have encouraged competition throughout the economy. Proposals have been published for the reform of the legislation on mergers and restrictive trade practices.

The Government have launched the enterprise initiative, with the objective of helping businesses acquire the skills and information they require to compete effectively.

The balance of regional policy has been changed so that the Government's enterprise policies are properly reflected in the regions.

The emphasis of the Government's financial support for industry has shifted to industrial innovation. Support is now concentrated on collaborative research programmes, including the LINK scheme which brings together academic and industrial researchers, and the Eureka initiative for collaborative research in Europe.

The Financial Services Act has established a statutory framework for self-regulation of the financial services industry in the interests of investor protection, under the Securities and Investments Board and a number of self-regulatory organisations.

The Government have been active to strengthen safeguards against fraud and to ensure that the probity of our financial institutions is maintained without undermining their competitiveness. The Companies Acts 1980 and 1981 strengthened the powers of investigation and the courts' powers to disqualify directors for misconduct; and made insider dealing a criminal offence.

The Government have worked actively to maintain the world open trading system and are contributing to the current Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, which was launched in 1986 under the United Kingdom presidency.

Since 1979 productivity per person has increased by nearly 50 per cent. in agriculture and over 35 per cent. in the food manufacturing industry. Prices of food to consumers have risen more slowly than the general price level. The annual rate of increase in food prices since May 1979 has been 5·8 per cent. Exports of food, feed and alcoholic beverages have more than doubled since 1979.

Reform of the common agricultural policy (CAP), to tackle the problems of burgeoning expenditure and surplus production, has been significantly advanced by the agreement at the European Council in February on the application of budget discipline to the CAP, notably through the introduction or extension of stabilisers in all the main CAP commodity regimes. The stabilisers, which link full levels of support to predetermined quantities of production and provide for reductions in support if these quantities are exceeded, are intended to act as a disincentive to surplus production and thus to help bring supply and demand into better balance. These measures carry forward the process of reform of the CAP which has included the introduction of milk quotas in 1984, changes to the milk and beef regimes (including the maintenance of the beef variable premium) agreed under the United Kingdom presidency in December 1986, and measures to weaken intervention in the cereals and oilseeds sectors introduced in 1987.

The Government have also successfully negotiated the sheepmeat regime. The wool guarantee, the suckler cow premium and expenditure on hill livestock compensatory allowances have all been increased.

The Government have introduced measures designed to encourage farming practices which are beneficial to the landscape and to the conservation of wildlife, and have announced a number of new policy initiatives designed to encourage alternative uses of farmland, and to increase diversity on farms and in the rural economy generally. The Government recast capital grants in 1985 to put a strong emphasis on assistance for conservation work on farms and on investment to prevent pollution of rivers and streams from farm waste. Prompt action was taken to assist those farmers and growers affected by the storm of 16 October last year through specific emergency grant schemes. The sale, supply and use of pesticides has been brought under statutory control to ensure safe use in relation to operators, consumers and the environment.

After protracted and difficult negotiations, the Government secured an EC common fisheries policy settlement in 1983 on terms very favourable to the United Kingdom. Conservation, control and structural measures have all been strengthened. As part of that settlement and subsequently. The Salmon Act 1986 strengthened powers to deal with illegal fishing and made improvements in the conservation and management of salmon. In Scotland a new inshore fisheries regime has been established. The value of United Kingdom fish landings and of fish farming output has increased substantially.

Control to ensure protection of the marine environment have been strengthened, and substantial reductions have been achieved in the low levels of contaminants in material licensed for disposal at sea.

In transport, the Government have successfully increased consumer choice and efficiency by promoting competition in the provision of services.

British Airways and the British Airports Authority have been privatised. The Government have authorised the development of Stansted as London's third airport, encouraged the development of airport facilities in the regions, improved the management of the main local authority airports by having them transferred to companies, and have banned the noisiest aircraft from operating at British airports. The Government have strengthened competition on international routes within Europe and over the north Atlantic by negotiating more liberal bilateral arrangements and have secured agreement to a package of liberalisation measures within the European Community as a first step towards completion of the internal aviation market.

In England local bus services outside London have been deregulated. This has resulted in greater competition between operators, more innovation and flexibility in meeting the needs of passengers, and lower costs and subsidies, as well as an increase in the overall provision of bus mileage. The privatisation of the National Bus Company has been completed well ahead of schedule, and the majority of its subsidiaries have been bought by their own managers or employees. British Rail has been given objectives for improving the quality of its services and increasing its efficiency through reduced subsidy. It is now set to meet its 1989-90 objective while sustaining an ambitious and increasing investment programme to improve quality of service. This means that its subsidy will have been reduced by almost 45 per cent. between 1983 and 1989-90.

The Government have successfully promoted co-operation between public and private sectors in projects such as the Channel tunnel, the London docklands light railway and the Dartford-Thurrock crossing of the Thames.

The Merchant Shipping Act includes measures to improve safety and encourage the employment of British seafarers aboard British ships. Extensive action has been taken to improve ferry safety following the tragic Zeebrugge desaster.

In England capital investment in trunk roads has increased by over 30 per cent. since 1979. Some 750 miles of new and improved motorways and other trunk roads have been completed, including 300 miles of bypasses. The Government are supporting 340 major local authority road schemes, most of which are aimed at bypassing local communities or relieving them of traffic. The Government's continuing concentration on road and vehicle safety measures has given us the best road accident record in Europe. Casualty figures for 1987 were the lowest for 30 years, despite a fourfold increase in traffic in the same period; and pedestrian deaths were the lowest ever recorded. The aim is to reduce casualties by one third by the year 2000.

Government policies on taxation and licensing helped to make 1987 the third best year ever for drilling activities in the North sea, despite the 1986 fall in oil prices. Domestic gas now costs less in real terms than in 1970, while the price of electricity for domestic consumers has gone down by 8 per cent. in real terms in the last five years.

Deep-mined productivity of coal production is now 60 per cent. higher than it was in 1978-79 and some 50 per cent. higher than the average for 1983-84, before the miners' strike. This encouraging growth in productivity reflects a continuing effort by all concerned to produce coal at a price the market can afford.

In England spending on the Health Service is up by 39 per cent. in real terms from £6·4 billion in 1978-79 to £18·9 billion now. There are over 10,000 more doctors and dentists and over 50,000 more nurses and midwives. Capital spending has increased from £373 million to £1·1 billion, a 32 per cent. increase in real terms. Some 270 health building schemes, each worth over £1 million have been started and completed. Over 1 million more in-patient cases are now being dealt with each year, and waiting lists are down by 64,000.

The Government made an extra £25 million available to health authorities in England last year, through the waiting list fund, to tackle waiting black spots. Indications are that they have used the extra funding to treat some 100,000 more cases. The Government have increased the fund to some £30 million in the current year and the aim will be at least to equal last year's ambitious achievements.

There is already clear evidence that the general managers who have been appointed throughout the Health Service are providing energetic and innovative leadership, with speedier and more incisive decision making. Health authorities are continuing to improve efficiency and their cost improvement programmes have yielded savings worth over £560 million in the past four years. Savings worth some £150 million are planned for this year.

The Government have set up an independent review body to recommend on nurses' pay, have implemented all five of its reports, and have funded 90 per cent. of the costs of those awards. The 1988 report will be implemented in full and fully funded, with the result that nurses will receive their highest ever level of pay in real terms, and will have received on average a 44 per cent. increase in real terms since 1979.

The Government have developed a comprehensive strategy in response to the threat of AIDS and have taken, and will continue to take, all necessary measures to contain the spread of the virus.

In the social services field there have been increases in places in training centres and community homes for mentally handicapped people. There are more home help staff, more social work staff, more places in day centres for elderly people, and many more places in residential and nursing homes.

Following publication of the White Paper "Promoting Better Health", the Government have opened up discussions with professions about arrangements for implementing a wide range of important reforms in the delivery of primary health care. The emphasis is on health promotion, better services for the consumer and value for money.

Government expenditure on social security is now at its highest level ever both in cash and real terms. Spending on social security is up by 39 per cent. in real terms from £16·4 billion in 1978-79 to £46·4 billion to 1987-88. For pensioners, the Government's main achievement has been to provide the opportunity for average incomes to grow by 18 per cent. in real terms over the period. Total expenditure, including rate rebates on benefits for the elderly and spending on 1 million extra pensioners, has risen by 31 per cent. in real terms.

The Government have undertaken a fundamental review of the social security system resulting in the Social Security Act 1986. Most of the provisions of that Act have now been implemented. Statutory maternity pay was introduced in 1987; income support has now replaced supplementary benefit, family credit has replaced family income supplement, housing benefit has been changed, and the social fund has been introduced. This will make the system simpler and easier to understand, direct help more effectively to those who need it, and improve work incentives. Over £200 million extra has been provided for family credit to help low-income working families with children.

An objective of the Government has been to encourage the spread of occupational and personal pensions, and to give people more choice in how to provide for their retirement. In 1985 the Government gave everyone leaving an employment scheme the right to a fair transfer value to a new employer's scheme or to buy a deferred annuity. The Government also gave members rights to all the information they need to take decisions about their pension. The Social Security Act 1986 gave everyone the choice between staying fully in SERPS or an employer's scheme or having a personal pension scheme, and employees will be able to boost their pension rights by making extra contributions.

Since 1979, substantial progress has been made in reforming the structure and financial basis of local authorities to make them more accountable and reponsive to the needs of their local electorates, and to give better value for money in the provision of local services. The structure of local government in England has been simplified and improved with the abolition of an unnecessary tier of government in Greater London and the Metropolitan areas. The Audit Commission for England and Wales was established in 1983 and has already made great progress in identifying opportunities for improving value for money in local government, some of which are beginning to show results. Legislation on competition is ensuring that local authorities in Great Britain subject the provision of an increasing range of their services to the discipline of competitive tendering. The Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local authority business identified a number of measures needed to improve local authority procedures and avoid abuses, and the Government are following up the recommendation in stages. Measures on local government finance have restrained the growth of local authority expenditure in Great Britain, particularly in some of the more extravagant high-spending authorities. The Local Government Finance Bill currently before Parliament makes provision for the abolition of domestic rates in England and Wales and their replacement by a fairer and more broadly based community charge. The same Bill includes provisions to remedy the uneven burden of non-domestic rates on businesses through the establishment of a nationally determined uniform business rate.

In housing, the Government introduced the first statutory charter of rights for public sector tenants including the right to buy. Since then over 1 million tenants in Great Britain have bought their homes. The stock of owner-occupied dwellings in Britain has increased by 3 million; more people own their homes than ever before; and 64 per cent. of all dwellings are owner-occupied. There has been a net increase in the stock as a whole of about 1·6 million—more than enough to keep pace with the growth in the number of households over the period.

Grants for home improvements have been at a historically high level; improved targeting on those in most need is being introduced. The Government's estate action programme has helped local authorities with over 200 schemes on rundown council estates in England. A scheme of assistance has been introduced for owners of defective houses previously in the public sector throughout Great Britain, and good progress has been made. Measures have been introduced to strengthen the rights of leaseholders living in private blocks of flats.

The Housing Bill, which is currently before Parliament, aims to broaden the choice open to tenants and encourage more private investment in housing in England and Wales; it will deregulate rents in the independent rented sector; provide the basis for an expansion of the housing association movement; allow for the establishment of housing action trusts in some of the most rundown areas of local authority housing; and provide all secure local authority tenants with the opportunity to transfer to new landlords approved by the Housing Corporation.

In the environment, the Government have created a unified inspectorate of pollution for England and Wales with a remit to develop an integrated approach to pollution control. Following a successful initiative in Europe to bring to an end the addition of lead to petrol, the maximum lead content of petrol has been cut by 60 per cent, a tax differential in favour of unleaded petrol of 11p a gallon has been introduced and unleaded petrol is now available at over 800 sites.

The Government have taken steps to reduce the pollution of our rivers, estuaries and beaches. Last year the United Kingdom chaired the North sea conference which produced an important package of measures to safeguard and enhance the quality of the North sea.

The Government have made substantial progress in securing the future of the natural heritage. In Great Britain, over 5,000 sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) have been notified or renotfied as part of the implementation of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; this process is now 85 per cent. complete. Also, 26 special protection areas have been designated throughout the United Kingdom under the European birds directive, and 35 wetlands of international importance under the ramsar convention.

The Government have taken a wide range of steps to simplify and improve the planning system and to speed up its operation, while protecting and enhancing the environment in town and country. The area of approved green belt in England has more than doubled since 1979; the annual acreage of agricultural land taken for development in England and Wales the 1980s is less than one third of the levels seen in the 1960s and early 1970s; and nearly one half of land for new housing development in England is either redeveloped land or vacant land within urban areas.

The Government have introduced sweeping reforms in the education system in England and Wales. The Education Reform Bill now before Parliament aims to improve the standards of achievement of all pupils through the introduction of a national curriculum for the 5 to 16 age group of core and foundation subjects for which attainment targets, programmes of study and arrangements for assessment and testing will be established; to widen the choice available to parents for the education of their children; to ensure that schools can admit pupils up to the limit of their capacity; to require all local education authorities to develop schemes of resource allocation to schools and to delegate budgetary control to all further education colleges, secondary schools and larger primary schools; to offer all secondary schools and larger primary schools the opportunity to apply to opt out of local authority control; to establish polytechnics and other major colleges as independent institutions; and to reform the arrangements for funding the university system.

In addition, the Government continue to seek to improve teaching quality, and have introduced a new 16-plus examination system, the GCSE based on national criteria, and the AS levels to broaden A-level studies. The technical and vocational education initiative has been introduced to boost practical elements in the 14 to 18 curriculum. In higher education, record numbers of students have been admitted and the Government have endorsed plans which provide for a continuation of the shift towards science, engineering and other vocational subjects.

The Government have substantially increased the manpower and other resources available to the police and have strengthened their powers to deal with public disorder. Over 50,000 neighbourhood watch schemes are now in operation in Great Britain. A total of £80 million is being invested in crime prevention this year and a new national crime prevention organisation will be established to co-ordinate local initiatives and spread good practice. An independent Crown Prosecution service is now in operation throughout England and Wales. Twenty-four senior and 34 junior attendance centres have been opened.

Measures have been taken to ensure that the terms of imprisonment served by violent offenders fully reflect society's abhorrence of their crimes. Government assistance to the victims' support movement has been greatly expanded: £11 million will be provided over the next three financial years to help local schemes. The Government have continued to develop an overall strategy for countering drug misuse and illicit trafficking. The Video Recordings Act has brought "video nasties" under control.

Legislation has also been put through for data protection; to provide more rigorous control of animal experimentation; to provide a framework for the development of broadcasting by satellite and cable television (including the establishment of the Welsh fourth channel); to set out a new framework for police powers, for providing safeguards for the citizen and for handling complaints against the police, to control the possession and sale of alcohol in connection with football matches; to provide for the establishment of the serious fraud office, now in operation, and make other improvements in the investigation, prosecution and trial of fraud offences; and to provide comprehensive new powers to investigate, restrain and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking, where the Government are working for international agreements to make such powers more generally effective.

The Government have recently set up an inquiry to consider allegations that former war criminals may be living in this country. The Government have played a major role in developing international co-operation in the fight against terrorism and have strengthened police powers under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. The policy of fair immigration control has seen the number of people accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom fall from 69,700 in 1979 to 45,500 in 1987, the lowest total since Commonwealth citizens became subject to control in 1962.

The Government introduced measures to improve controls on possession of firearms and shotguns; to remove outdated restrictions in liquor licensing law; to enable the United Kingdom to participate more effectively in the international fight against crime, including a major reform of extradition laws; to make provision for courts to order the confiscation of the proceeds of profitable crime; to provide for unduly lenient sentences to be reviewed; to create a statutory right for the victims of crime to receive compensation; to tighten the law on possession of knives and to ban the sale of offensive weapons which have no legitimate use; and to strengthen the jury system.

The Government have continued the reform of family law; have legislated to remove the legal disadvantages of children born outside marriage; and have brought schemes into effect to combat the evils of child abduction both within the United Kingdom and throughout the world. The Government have simplified conveyancing and extended the areas in which titles have to be registered.

A Legal Aid Bill has been introduced to set up a new board to administer legal aid and generally to ensure that legal aid is operated as efficiently and effectively as possible. The Government have continued the major programme of simplification and consolidation of our statute law.

In the arts, the National Heritage Memorial Fund has been established with funding of some £90 million to date. There has been a significant upsurge in business sponsorship — the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme has brought £16 million of new money into the arts in four years. Major progress has been made with the building of the new British Library at St. Pancras, and there have been major expansion schemes at some of the national museums and galleries, including with the Tate gallery's Clore gallery and the Tate gallery at Liverpool, the National gallery's Sainsbury wing, and the redevelopment of the Imperial war museum.

In defence, a substantial increase in resources has enabled the capability of the armed forces to be strengthened. The Government played its full part in implementing the NATO twin-track decision to modernise intermediate range nuclear weapons while seeking to achieve an arms control agreement, and this policy has been vindicated by the INF treaty. Increased efficiency is being pursued by the continuing transfer of resources from the support areas to the front line, and by introducing increased competition in defence contracts and promoting collaboration with our international partners. Major reorganisation of the headquarters structure of the Ministry of Defence has been introduced.

In foreign policy, the Government have maintained Britain's firm commitment to national defence and the NATO Alliance, and have promoted closer European defence co-operation — including through a revitalised Western European Union—as a means of strengthening the European pillar of the Alliance. At the same time, the Government have worked vigorously for a more stable relationship between East and West, seeking verifiable reductions in nuclear and conventional weapons and a global ban on chemical weapons, greater co-operation in settling regional conflicts and full respect for human rights. British Ministers and representatives have been active in building up an East-West dialogue with these aims and in promoting the setting priorities for the arms control process. The Government played a leading role in the conference on disarmament in Europe in which was successfully concluded in autumn 1986, and gave full support to our United States allies in their negotiations with the USSR over INF, which concluded last autumn with agreement on the global elimination of United States and Soviet land-based INF missiles with ranges between 500 and 5,500 km.

Within the European Community, the Government reached agreement at Fontainebleau in 1984 that the United Kingdom should pay a fairer share of the EC budget. In the United Kingdom presidency in 1986, and at the Brussels European Council this February, the Government secured major reforms of the common agricultural policy, including a binding ceiling on agricultural spending and automatic cost-cutting regime, for all commodities.

The Government have helped make it the Community's top priority to complete the single European market and services by 1992 so as to give our industry improved access to important markets in Europe and a better base from which to compete in world markets. The Government have championed measures to help our citizens, such as less regulation, cheaper air fares and higher product safety standards.

The Government supported the entry of Greece, Spain and Portugal into the Community, thereby underpinning their democracy and strengthening NATO. At British initiative the EC member states have agreed an internationally binding basis for closer co-operation in foreign policy.

Rhodesia was brought to legal independence as the Republic of Zimbabwe in 1980. The Government resolutely upheld and continue to defend the right of the Falklands islanders to live in peace under a Government of their own choosing. An agreement with China about the future of Hong Kong was ratified in 1985 and good progress has since been made implementing that agreement. The Gilbraltar border has been reopened, and negotiations have been started with Spain aimed at overcoming all our differences over the Rock.

At the United Nations and elsewhere the Government have supported the international rule of law and respect for human rights. With our Commonwealth and European partners, the Government have worked towards ending apartheid in South Africa by peaceful means. The Government have worked successfully for financial and administrative reform in the United Nations and have promoted international co-operation to combat terrorism and drug-trafficking. With the World Health Organisation, the Government organised the 1988 London summit of Ministers of Health on programmes for AIDS prevention, which was attended by 148 countries.

The Government have maintained a substantial and effective aid programme, totalling £11 billion in the period 1979-87. While the bulk of our bilateral aid has been focused on the poorest countries, the Government have provided long-term help to nearly 130 developing countries in all. The Government have responded swiftly and generously to appeals for emergency aid to sub-Saharan Africa and have taken the lead in promoting measures to relieve sub-Saharan African countries of their official debts.

Within the last year, unemployment in Scotland has fallen by 47,500. Manufacturing productivity in Scotland increased by 5·6 per cent. per annum between 1979 and the first half of 1987. Service sector employment showed an increase of over 62,000 between June 1983 and June 1987, and the number of self-employed increased by 45,000 between June 1981 and June 1987, compared with virtually no change in the three decades to 1981.

Since the introduction of the enterprise allowance scheme in 1983, nearly 30,000 unemployed people have been helped to start up in business, and over 132,000 people are currently benefiting from the Government's employment and training measures in Scotland. The Manpower Services Commission plans to spend some £330 million in Scotland in the current year.

In 1987, there was a net growth of 2,500 in company registrations in Scotland. Between 1979 and 1986, the output of the Scottish electronics industry rose by around 133 per cent. in real terms, and between 1979 and 1986 electrical and instrument engineering output in Scotland rose by nearly 90 per cent. Inward investment of some £2·6 billion, planned to create or safeguard some 50,000 jobs, has been attracted to Scotland since the formation of "Locate in Scotland" in 1981.

Owner-occupation among Scots has increased significantly, from 35 to over 43 per cent. A major contribution to this increase has been the 113,000 tenants who have exercised their right to buy their houses under the statutory charter of rights for public sector tenants introduced in 1980. The Housing (Scotland) Bill will set up a new housing development agency, Scottish Homes, which will play a key role in revitalising Scotland's housing and will promote more diverse patterns of tenure in the public sector. The volume of applications for home improvement and repairs grants has increased substantially. The Government have enabled the number of houses let by housing associations in Scotland to increase sixfold since 1979.

Legislation providing for the abolition of domestic rates in Scotland and their replacement by a community charge payable by all adults was enacted in 1987 and the new system will come into operation in 1989.

In town and country planning in Scotland, measures have been taken to speed up the planning system. On the planning requirements of high technology industries, small businesses, private housebuilders and major retail development, the Government have taken steps to allow the establishment of simplified planning zones. Major initiatives have been taken to reform and simplify the building control system to reduce restrictions while maintaining public safeguards. Access for disabled persons to public buildings has been greatly improved by reforms in building regulations.

The deregulation of local bus services in Scotland has been achieved with service levels maintained overall and improvements in many areas. The Government have stimulated innovation through competition while cutting subsidies. Since 1979, over £710 million has been invested in motorways and trunk roads in Scotland, including completion of the 127 miles of the A9 from Perth to Easter Ross, and substantial progress has been made on the Perth-Dundee-Aberdeen route, the A75 between Gretna and Stranraer, and the A82 alongside Loch Lomond. Twenty-seven bypasses, relieving communities of through traffic, have been opened.

Major reforms have been introduced in the education system. The Education (Scotland) Act 1981 gave parents a right to choose their children's school. Over 116,000 placing requests have been made to date and about 94 per cent. of them have been successful. That Act also increased educational opportunity by the introduction of the assisted places scheme from which more than 2,600 children benefited in 1987-88. The School Boards (Scotland) Bill, now before Parliament will further extend parental involvement through the creation of school boards. The school examination system is being modernised with the introduction of standard grade and associated revision of highers and certificate of sixth year studies. The technical and vocational educational initiative is being extended throughout Scotland. Proposals have been brought forward to revise the school curriculum for ages 5-14 and to improve assessment techniques, including the introduction of nationally standardised testing in key elements of English and mathematics at ages eight and 12. The number of students in full-time higher education in Scotland is at the highest level ever recorded and radical changes in further education have greatly increased the take-up of vocational training at all levels.

Police manpower in Scotland has increased, and, in order to release police officers for operational duties, the Government are encouraging civilianisation of posts wherever possible. Increased attention has been devoted to crime prevention.

The Government have intensified the campaign against drug misuse. Drug wings have been established in the Scottish crime squad and all eight Scottish police forces now have a specialised drug squad or unit. Since 1979, a total of 52 major hospital developments have been completed in Scotland, providing 5,803 beds and 481 day places. A further 34 schemes are in planning, under construction or being commissioned, which will provide a further 4,484 beds. In addition to the public education campaigns on AIDS, the Government have this year made over £6 million available to health boards throughout Scotland in recognition of the extra burdens which AIDS places upon them, including funding for three special AIDS units in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Dundee. The Government have supported several projects for research on HIV infection and AIDS and have provided funding for studies into the incidence of AIDS in Scotland. In addition, the Government encourage and support voluntary sector initiatives in the AIDS field in Scotland.

An extra £7·6 million was allocated to health boards in 1987-88 of which £3·6 million was devoted to schemes to reduce waiting lists. A special fund of £3 million has been set aside for 1988-89 which will fund projects to reduce waiting times for patients. Health boards are also being asked to increase the priority they give to this area.

The Government's commitment to the outlying areas of Scotland is demonstrated by the Western Isles integrated development programme which ended its five-year span in 1987 and provided £56 million to improve socioeconomic conditions in the area and by the five-year agricultural development programme for Scottish islands which started this month. This provides £38 million to increase the efficiency of agricultural businesses without adding to overall agricultural production.

Five environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) have been designated in Scotland under which farmers can receive payments for agreeing to farm in a conservation-friendly way. These areas are in different parts of the country and include the Machair ESA in the crofting area of Scotland. The Government remain fully committed to the expansion of forestry and are now replacing the anomalous tax arrangements for forestry with a much improved grant scheme.

The Government's commitment to promote art and culture in Scotland has resulted in major new galleries for the Burrell collection in Glasgow and for modern art in Edinburgh. A new home for the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama was opened earlier this year and the first phase of a new building for the National Library of Scotland in Edinburgh will be opened next year.

The Government have done more than any previous Administration to secure the future of the Gaelic language. A new specific grants scheme for Gaelic education, designed to improve the quality of Gaelic teaching and curriculum in schools was introduced in 1986. Grants under the scheme amount to £0·5 million in the current year. In addition, substantially increased resources have been allocated to a range of organisations providing support for Gaelic language and culture.

In Northern Ireland, the Government have pursued the policy of combating terrorism, within the rule of law, by the most effective means available. In the implementation of this policy, the security forces have conducted themselves with great courage and skill: many terrorists have been apprehended, much material has been recovered, and a large number of terrorist operations have been frustrated, which would otherwise have added to the tragic roll of death and suffering.

The Government have continued to implement the Anglo-Irish Agreement, and have pressed for better cross-border security co-operation within the framework of it.

The Government's efforts to find an agreed basis on which greater responsibility can be devolved to the elected representatives of the people of Northern Ireland have continued.

A key objective of Government policy is to regenerate the private sector in Northern Ireland and release the region's potential for economic growth. To this end, the industrial development organisations in Northern Ireland have promoted 64,450 jobs, while the youth training programme has provided opportunities for an estimated 72,000 entrants with some 23,500 man years of work provided by the action for community employment scheme. At any time, some 29,000 persons are benefiting from a wide range of employment and training resources. A firm commitment has been made and significant steps taken to secure equality of opportunity in employment.

Belfast city centre has been revitalised both in terms of housing and commerce. Housing conditions have shown improvement with a considerable reduction in the level of unfitness, and a significant increase in the level of owner-occupation.

Proposals for the reform of the educational system to improve educational standards together with new opportunities and incentives for existing schools seeking to promote integrated education have recently been published.

In addition, substantial programmes have been maintained in agriculture, health and personal social services, environmental services and social security.

Since the establishment of WINvest in 1983, Wales has secured over 220 inward investment projects from overseas companies promising some 25,000 new or safeguarded jobs and involving about £800 million of capital investment. Since 1979, the Government have committed over £130 million — at today's prices — to the land reclamation programme in Wales, one of the largest and most sustained programmes in Europe, and the Welsh Development Agency has constructed some 7 million sq ft of factory space. The success of the Development Board for Rural Wales is indicated by an estimated 3·5 per cent. increase in the population of the area covered by the board between 1979 and 1986. Three enterprise zones set up by the Government are located in Wales; at Swansea, Delyn and the Milford Haven waterway. Over 8,500 people are currently employed in these zones, of whom 3,600 are in new jobs.

The Government have supported the rapid spread of local enterprise agencies in Wales, of which there are now 23. Such agencies have had £8·8 million of central Government assistance and they estimate that they have helped to create 18,900 jobs.

Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales has fallen in each of the last 22 months—a fall over that period of 3·1 percentage points.

Since their institution in 1982, urban development grants of some £34 million have been awarded to 67 projects throughout Wales. These are expected to bring forward a total private sector investment of some £159 million. As part of the Government's policy for inner city areas, the Cardiff Bay development corporation was established on 3 April 1987 to regenerate the docklands area. In 1988-89, a total of £16·2 million will be made available, the first tranche of a total commitment of nearly £50 million over the first three years. Since 1981, the number of self-employed in Wales has increased by 34,000 to 149,000.

Owner-occupation has increased from 59 per cent. of housing stock in 1979 to 68 per cent. Almost 60,000 public sector dwellings have been sold to their tenants under right to buy and voluntary terms since 1980 and over 50,000 new homes have been built for sale. Since 1979, the proportion of Welsh households lacking basic amenities has more than halved.

Over 142,000 home improvement grant schemes for private sector dwellings have been completed since July 1979 with a value of £414 million. In the same period, £339 million has been spent on the renovation of local authority housing stock. Since 1982, over 5,500 dwellings have been improved under enveloping schemes.

Expenditure on the Health Service in Wales has risen by over 42 per cent. after allowing for general inflation between 1978-79 and 1988-89. Over £500 million at current prices will have been invested in the capital estate of hospital and community health services and five major new hospitals have been opened. Nearly 24 per cent. more patients were treated in 1986 than 1979. Medical and dental staff have increased by 13 per cent. and nursing and midwifery staff by 20 per cent. during this period.

Current expenditure on education, excluding school meals and milk, was 7·8 per cent. higher in real terms in 1986-87 than in 1978-79. Pupil numbers dropped by 14·8 per cent. in the same period: and expenditure per primary pupil rose by over 21 per cent. from £747 to £909, and per secondary pupil by nearly 28 per cent. from £1,033 to £1,320, their best ever levels.

Since 1979, over £700 million has been spent on the construction and improvement of roads in Wales providing 22 miles of motorway and 107 miles of trunk road. The Government have begun construction of the first ever immersed road tunnel in the United Kingdom —the Conway crossing/A55 scheme.

Since 1979-80, overall net resources made available to the Wales tourist board have increased by 170 per cent., including an increase of 140 per cent. in project support, which over the period has stimulated £78 million of mainly private sector investment and created almost 3,500 new jobs.

The Government's direct financial support for the Welsh language has increased annually from £0·2 million in 1979-80 to nearly £3·3 million in 1988-89. This is an increase in real terms of some 750 per cent. in that period. Since the Government decision to set up the Welsh fourth television channel in 1982, S4C has been an outstanding success in both artistic and employment terms.

New Zealand Butter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the question of the special arrangements for the import of New Zealand butter; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so at present.

Councillor Tim Brown

Mr. Clay: To ask the Prime Minister when she met Councillor Tim Brown of Sunderland to discuss shipbuilding.

The Prime Minister: As the House is aware, my normal practice is and will continue to be neither to confirm nor to deny whether meetings with private individuals have taken place, even in those cases where no such meeting has occurred.

Office Staff

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list individually the positions held by civil servants in her office, the periods they have been employed there and their current grades, together with salaries.

Salaries exclude London weighting and allowances, and are those payable as at March 1988.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Investors (Protection)

Sir William Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will take steps to publicise the purpose of the Financial Services Act 1986 to increase protection available to investors in the light of the campaign in the national press which suggests that insurance company salesmen are inherently less able to serve the needs of the public than independent financial advisers.

Mr. Maude: The rules made under the Financial Services Act have the effect that those selling or advising upon life insurance or unit trusts must be either appointed representatives of one provider of wholly independent intermediaries. Both will be subject to rules under the Act designed to protect investors. It is up to investment businesses to choose which of these two routes to follow, and investors are free to choose between them on their merits. The content of advertising, so long as it is not misleading and does not contravene any relevent regulations, is not a matter for me.

Manufactures

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the surplus or deficit in trade in manufactures with EEC and the rest of the world, respectively, in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to March 1988, there was an estimated deficit on trade in manufactures of £10·5 billion with the European Community and an estimated surplus of £2 billion with the rest of the world.

Northern Region

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list the various schemes for assistance to industry available to business in the northern region and provide details of the total financial assistance provided to such firms in the last three years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Assistance now available to businesses in the northern region is set out in the Department's booklet on the enterprise initiative.

Expenditure in the northern region in the three years to 31 March 1988 on the main schemes of assistance provided by my Department totalled some £350 million. This total consists of expenditure under the original and revised regional development grant schemes, project and training grants under the regional selective assistance, the business improvement services scheme, and expenditure under the Science and Technology Act and section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. Details are set out in the table.

SCOTLAND

Nuclear Power

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the total investment costs for each of the South of Scotland Electricity Board nuclear power plants in (a) historic costs and (b) current costs to date.

Mr. Lang: The South of Scotland Electricity Board has provided the following information based on its accounts for the year ending 31 March 1987:

£ million

	Hunterston A	Hunterston B	Torness
Historic costs	88·6	299·0	1,704·7
Current costs	623·0	917·9	2,046·3

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what benefits he expects to accrue to the Scottish economy, and in particular Caithness, from the maintenance and expansion of the Nuclear Power Development Establishment at Dounreay.

Mr. Lang: Consideration of the future of the fast reactor research programme, a major part of which is based at Dounreay, is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. I recognise that activities at the Dounreay establishment are of substantial economic benefit to the local community in Caithness.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has given permission for the export of any plutonium from (a) South of Scotland Electricity Board nuclear plants and (b) the Dounreay Fast Reactor Research Establishment under section 2(i) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, in any year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: No. All irradiated fuel from South of Scotland Electricity Board reactors is reprocessed by British Nuclear Fuels plc at Sellafield and authority for disposals under section 2(i) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Responsibility for activities at the UKAEA establishment at Dounreay is also a matter for my right hon. Friend.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total volume of radioactive wastes, including spent nuclear fuel, stored under licence at sites in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest inventory of radioactive wastes in the United Kingdom (January 1986) indicates that there are some 4,000 cu m of intermediate-level wastes and 151 cu m of high-level wastes stored at civil nuclear sites in Scotland. Low-level wastes are not normally stored but are disposed of as they arise. A revised inventory is in the course of preparation. Spent nuclear fuel is not regarded as waste. There are some 109·5 tonnes of fuel in store at civil nuclear sites in Scotland pending reprocessing.

THE ARTS

Natural History Museum

Mr. Soley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the estimated change in attendance at the Natural History museum since the introduction of admission charges.

Mr. Luce: I understand, that in the year following the introduction of charges at the British Museum (Natural History) the number of visitors fell by slightly less than the 40 per cent. which had been predicted. Attendance figures are now showing a rising trend with 44 per cent. more people visiting the museum this Easter than during Easter 1987.

Museums

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the grants to each of the 10 national museums in cash terms for 1988-89, excluding the additional sums payable in consideration of superannuation and the Treasury Solicitor.

Mr. Luce: For the 10 national museums and galleries which received transfers of funding for superannuation, the Treasury Solicitor and other services, the grants-in-aid for 1988-89 excluding these transfers is as follows:

	£ million
British Museum	20·302
British Museum (Natural History)	18·834
Imperial War Museum	11·811
National Gallery	10·542
National Maritime Museum	7·388
National Portrait Gallery	4·964
Science Museum	15·445
Tate Gallery	9·744
Victoria and Albert Museum	19·024
Wallace Collection	1·412

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of his total expenditure on museums is represented by his allocation to the Museums and Galleries Commission in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: In 1988-89, the Museums and Galleries Commission's grant in aid represents 4·2 per cent. of the total planned central Government expenditure on museums and galleries.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish his estimated expenditure on (a) the Museums and Galleries Commission and (b) the Museums and Galleries Commission grants to each of the seven English area museum councils and the local museums purchase fund, for the years 1987-88 to 1990-91 inclusive.

Mr. Luce: The grants in aid paid to the Museums and Galleries Commission in 1987-88 and allocated to it for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91 are as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	6·233
1988-89	6·481
1989-90	6·696
1990-91	6·877

Each of the figures includes £1·282 million for the local museum purchase funds. It is for the commission to decide how much of its grant in aid to allocate to the English area museum councils. I understand that in 1987-88 its expenditure on the councils was £2·49 million.

Public Library Development Incentive

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Arts what awards he intends to make under the public library development incentive scheme.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to announce that I am awarding £243,500 under the public library development incentive Scheme to Berkshire, Cleveland, Devonshire, Gateshead, Leicestershire and Sheffield library authorities, and to two regional library co-operatives: the London and south-eastern library region and the northern regional library system. These are the first awards made under the scheme which I set up last December to encourage new enterprises, designed to extend or improve the public library service in England. The award will cover 40 per cent. of the costs of the enterprises and are conditional on the authorities providing the remainder.

Arts Council (Publications)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the publications that the Arts Council produced in 1987-88 and the cost of each publication.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The Arts Council publishes two lists of its publications on a regular basis; I am placing copies of the latest ones in the Library. These give the cost of each publication for which a charge is made.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Hospital Radio Stations

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking an exemption for hospital radio stations from paying value added tax on essential equipment; what response he made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received no further representations since the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 10 March at column 307.

Exchange Rate

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last reviewed the Government's policy on the level of the sterling exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: The Government's policy on the sterling exchange rate was set out in my right hon. Friend's Budget speech and in the medium-term financial strategy published as part of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" on 15 March.

European Monetary System

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made as to whether the United Kingdom will be in a position to enter the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system when the internal market is completed.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 26 April to the hon. Member for Sedgefield, (Mr. Blair) at column 106.

EC (Budget Council)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 3 May 1988, c. 399]: The President of the Budget Council yesterday (5 May) declared the second reading draft budget formally established and has sent the necessary documentation to the European Parliament, thereby respecting the deadline under article 203(5) of the treaty for the Council to respond to the Parliament's modifications and amendments to the Council's own earlier proposals.

The Italian delegation has made a unilateral declaration to the effect that it cannot approve the draft inter-governmental agreement (IGA) needed to finance the budget before agreement has been reached on the method for calculating member states' contributions to the United Kingdom's abatement. This calculation affects the relative amounts of VAT and of IGA payments contributed by member states. The amounts entered in the draft IGA text are still explicitly provisional and indicative. The Council has agreed that they will be adjusted as necessary to conform with the payments due under the new own resources decision as finally agreed, and with the eventual size of the budget as adopted taking account of the Parliament's rights under the treaty as regards non-obligatory expenditure.

The provisional amounts in the draft IGA text are shown in the table. The total includes 1,000 mecu (£690 million) to cover the monetary reserve which, as agreed at the Brussels European Council, will be drawn upon only if changes in the ecu-dollar exchange rate increase spending requirements in the agricultural guarantee section of the budget by more than 400 mecu (£277 million). The intention is that member states should contribute to the IGA in accordance with the sums which they would have paid had the new own resources decision taken effect immediately. Their contributions will represent non-repayable advances against amounts due under the new own resources decision and will be payable by monthly instalments.

	mecu	£ million
Belgium	251	174
Denmark	171	119
Germany	1,982	1,375
Greece	84	58
Spain	528	366
France	1,532	1,063
Ireland	45	31
Italy	1,342	931
Luxembourg	15	10
Netherlands	369	256
Portugal	63	44
United Kingdom	1,263	876
TOTAL[1]	7,647	5,304

[1] The individual lines may not add up to totals because of rounding. All sterling equivalent figures are calculated at the rate of 1·4417 ecu to the pound used by the Commission in its latest budget proposals.

As explained in my reply of 9 March, columns 208-9, the extra financing will be partially offset by smaller VAT payments. On the foregoing figures, the total extra financing, compared with the maximum amount available under the existing own resources ceiling, would be around 5,400 mecu (£3,700 million), after allowing for a surplus of 500 mecu (£350 million) carried forward from 1987.

I have made it clear in the Council that the United Kingdom cannot pay over any of the additional sums without the approval of Parliament. Parliament's approval will be sought by means either of a special estimate or of a Bill, following the precedents of the 1984 and 1985 IGAs respectively. The method chosen will depend mainly on the timing of the adoption of the budget and the IGA and of the agreement of the new own resources decision. The IGA is subject to approval in the national Parliaments of all other member states as well.

ENERGY

CEGB Research and Development

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the proposed privatisation of the research and development functions other than nuclear now carried out by the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received a number of representations from within and outside the industry about the arrangements for research and development in the privatised electricity industry. We are consulting the industry on this matter.

Departmental Contracts

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list any contracts placed with Wastechem Ltd. of Bramhall, Cheshire, by his Department either alone or in collaboration with the Department of the Environment;

(2) if his Department has placed any contracts with BBGN Nuclear Technology of Bramhall, Cheshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has no contracts with either of the companies named.

"Britain's Nuclear Nightmare"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the book by Rob Edwards and James Cutler entitled, "Britain's Nuclear Nightmare" published in April.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes. The book has been ordered.

EC Research Centre

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at Harwell has any direct or indirect research involvement with the EEC joint research centre at Ispra, Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Plutonium (Leasing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money the Central Electricity Generating Board has received since May 1979 for the leasing of plutonium to (a) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, at Dounreay, (b) the Kernforschungzentrum, at Karlsruhe, Federal Republic of Germany and (c) the Eidgenossisches Institut für Reaktorforschung at Wurlingen, Switzerland; and what safeguards arrangements cover these leases.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The sums of money received by the CEGB for leasing plutonium are commercially confidential. Plutonium under lease from the CEGB to the UKAEA is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement. At present the CEGB has no plutonium under lease to the Kernforschungzentrum, at Karlsruhe or the Eidgenossisches Institut für Reaktoforschung at Wurlingen.

Energy Technology Support Unit, Harwell

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current profitability and future commercial prospects of the energy technology support unit at Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The energy technology support unit (ETSU) is a part of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, and its profitability is therefore a matter for the authority. The future commercial prospects for ETSU are likewise a matter for the authority.

Spent Nuclear Fuel Elements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what tonnage of spent nuclear fuel elements has been stockpiled by the Central Electricity Generating Board from (a) Magnox reactors and (b) advanced gas-cooled reactor nuclear plants, awaiting reprocessing at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On 31 March 1988 CEGB power stations were storing a total of 1,200 tonnes uranium Magnox irradiated fuel and 55 tonnes uranium AGR irradiated fuel having discharged it from the reactors. All this fuel will be transported to Sellafield in due course.

Public Sector Companies (Foreign Shareholding)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list all the public sector United Kingdom companies in which Transnuklear of Hanau, Federal Republic of Germany, has a corporate share involvement; and if he will set out the percentage share involvement by Transnuklear;

(2) if he will list all the public sector United Kingdom companies in which NUKEM Gmbh of Hanau, Federal Republic of Germany, has a corporate shareholding and set out the percentage share involvement by NUKEM.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Neither Transnuklear nor NUKEM Gmbh has any shareholding in any United Kingdom public sector company in the energy sector. With regard to other areas of the public sector I shall reply to the hon. Member in due course.

Atomic Weapons Research Establishment (Aldermaston)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any work connected with the fast reactor research programme is currently, or ever has been, carried out at the atomic weapons research establishment at Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No work on the fast reactor research programme has been carried out at Aldermaston since 1979.

Plutonium (Civil Reactors)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the reply given by the then Under-Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore), Official Report, 4 February 1983, column 206, regarding the use of plutonium from civil reactors, remains Government policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 15 December 1986 at column 383.

EMPLOYMENT

Channel Islands (Work Permits)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has been consulted in connection with legislation proposed by the authorities of (a) Jersey and (b) Guernsey seeking to establish work permit controls in those islands; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of such controls on British citizens in these territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

There is no legislation proposed by the Channel Islands' authorities to establish work permits which would affect United Kingdom citizens. Should any such system be proposed it would be examined in the light of the need to ensure that those with close links with the islands had adequate opportunities for employment.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Firemen

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications of the recent changes in the social security system for the position of firemen.

Mr. Scott: Under income support, retained (part-time) firefighters will have the first £15 of their weekly earnings disregarded instead of the full disregard that was available under supplementary benefit. Payments of bounty will be treated as capital.

Those who made the change from supplementary benefit to income support will have had the level of their benefit income protected by transitional additions.

Geriatric Beds

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications of the proportion of the number of available geriatric beds in any given district health authority to the number of geriatric consultants for the provision of good health service provision for the elderly.

Mrs. Currie: The number of geriatric beds available to a geriatric consultant is only one of many aspects of good health service provision for elderly people. Other factors would include the use made by elderly patients of beds under other consultants, levels of junior medical and support therapy staff, and, most importantly, the level of care in the community including services via the family practitioner committees. It is for health authorities to resource particular areas of their service according to local needs and circumstances.

Health Authorities (Throughput Rates)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the diverse throughput rates between health authorities, as revealed in his Department's performance indicators, in relation to the quality of patient care.

Mrs. Currie: Health Service indicators provide evidence which suggests that there are significant variations in the throughput, of patients receiving acute care, achieved by health authorities. Where this is reinforced by similar variations in values for related indicators it implies that there is scope for some authorities to make better use of resources and so provide more services to patients. Questions raised by the indicators need to be examined by managers in the light of other information available locally. This would include achieving the right balance between efficiency and quality of care.

All health authorities have been requested to discuss their indicators for the four years available, the most recent being for 1986-87, by the end of July.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the weekly premium over benefit of those participating on the new adult training programme will affect their claim to housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: No. An amendment to the housing benefit regulations will be laid before Parliament shortly, which would provide for the premium to be disregarded in the calculation of housing benefit entitlement.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if people with capital between £6,000 and £8,000 who fail to qualify for housing benefit because of the assumed tariff income, but who nevertheless have lost more than £2·50 per week, qualify for a transitional payment under his Department's new arrangements.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates the administrative costs will be of his announcement of 27 April of changes to the housing benefit regulations (a) in total, (b) expressed as a proportion of the additional money to be made available to claimants and (c) as an average weekly sum per head of the beneficiaries of the changes.

Mr. Scott: The administrative costs of implementing the changes cannot be precisely assessed until more information is available about the scale of the inquiries and claims which need to be handled, and until detailed procedures for handling claims have been agreed.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals his Department has to set up a new unit to administer the transitional protection scheme on housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 5 May 1988 at columns 550-51.

Infant Formulae

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet received the first report of the committee which monitors compliance with the provisions of the Food Manufacturers Federation voluntary code of practice on the marketing of infant formulae in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We received the first report from the Food and Drink Federation (FDF) monitoring committee early in March. It is a thorough, balanced and objective document and I congratulate the committee chairman, Dame Alison Munro, and her members.

Their report shows that the Government's arrangements for securing, within the United Kingdom, the aim and principles of the World Health Organisation's international code of marketing of breast-milk substitutes are working well. It makes suggestions about improving these arrangements further. We shall be discussing with the monitoring committee and the manufacturers how to take these matters forward.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Sevices what is his estimate of the average cost to public funds of each cervical cancer death, including hospital, medical services, medicines and funeral expenses, social security payments, and similar benefits to the children and relations in need.

Mrs. Currie: Information is available only on the costs incurred in any particular year of treating in-patients with cervical cancer who were discharged or who died in hospital during that year. This came to about £11 million in England, in 1987-88, which represents £940 per case treated. It is not possible to trace the treatment and other costs incurred in the course of their illness by patients who eventually die of cervical cancer. The average cost of each cervical smear taken is estimated to be £10.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to monitor (a) the assessments being carried out by health authorities for the nurses' and midwives' clinical grading review and (b) the funding implications of those assessments.

Mr. Newton: Implementation of the new clinical grading structure, including monitoring of assessments for consistency and of cost implications, will be among the matters to be covered in guidance we expect to issue shortly. This will be supplemented by visits from officials and by returns from health authorities showing how many staff have been allocated from each existing grade to each new one.

Income Support (Rates)

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are being taken, following the recent changes in social security regulations, to ensure that those previously entitled to 100 per cent. rate assistance, and who live in highly rated areas, will receive sufficient income support to offset having to pay at least 20 per cent. of their rates from 1 April.

Mr. Scott: As we made clear in the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) the Government are firmly of the view that local accountability must be improved by giving everyone a financial interest in the level of domestic rates charged by their local authority. The income support rates include compensation to reflect the average amount the recipients will have to contribute: to provide further compensation on an individual basis would undermine the purpose of requiring everyone to meet at least 20 per cent. of their rates.

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each region and for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the numbers of agency medical secretaries employed and (b) the amount of money spent on agency medical secretaries.

Mr. Newton: This information is not held centrally.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social fund applications for (a) grants, (b) loans and (c) either grants or loans had been received at his Department's local offices in London road and Becket street, Derby, up to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 27 April 1988]: We shall be placing in the Library details of the operation of the social fund for each local office. These data will comprise the outstanding balances in the loans budget and community care grants budget and the numbers and the financial amounts of applications and payments for crisis loans, budgeting loans and community care grants. This information will be provided monthly as soon as the data have been collated. I will write to the hon. Member when the first month's information becomes available.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 132

SESSION 1987–88

25th April–6th May 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
